Adelanto Leaves Millions On Table In Sale Of Key Industrial Property

A DELANTO—A pallor has descended over Adelanto City Hall in the aftermath of a closed-session vote by the city council at its December 9 meeting in which the city sold 47 acres of land in the city's industrial park that was in the possession of the successor to its former redevelopment agency to an Orange County investor at the bargain basement price of $375,000.

John Woodard

Coupled with recent action by the city to allow large scale marijuana cultivation operations to operate out of the same industrial park, reports are afoot that illegal inducements in the form of bribes and kickbacks have been or are soon to be provided to city officials in return for their having signed off on the land transaction in which the cash-strapped city sold the property for some $9 million to $12 million less than what some market analysts say it is worth.

But city officials have retorted that there are extenuating circumstances that grew out of mistakes made by their city council and staff managerial predecessors more than two decades ago that resulted in the State of California imposing limitations on the sale and disposition of redevelopment agency property that hamstrung the current city See P 3

County Forced To Surrender $9 M Loan Made To RDA For Cedar Glen Fire Fix

The Third District Court of Appeal has rejected San Bernardino County's challenge of Sacramento County Superior Court Judge Eugene L. Balonon's July 2013 judgment upholding the California Department of Finance's decision to distribute to "other taxing entities" some $9 million in unused funds from a $10 million loan from the county to its now defunct redevelopment agency. That loan was intended to empower the Cedar Glen Disaster Recovery Redevelopment Project.

The matter became an issue in the aftermath of state legislation in 2011 that shuttered redevelopment agencies throughout the state. The legislation impacted upon $10 million that had been loaned to the county redevelopment agency by the county to redress devastation in the Cedar Glen area of the San Bernardino Mountains in the wake of so called Old Fire in 2003, which destroyed 345 homes. Following the fire and its devastation, the county created a disaster project area and a disaster recovery plan. The county then loaned the county redevelopment agency

$10 million from the county's general fund to pay for infrastructure improvements.

As the county and the redevelopment agency were working toward the implementation of the plan, the state dissolved redevelopment agencies statewide and the California Department of Finance had jurisdiction in determining how money that remained in the pre-existing redevelopment agency accounts was and is to be disbursed. LA & Ontario Sign Airport Transfer Pact

The Los Angeles City Council this week signed off on a $250 million settlement agreement with the City of Ontario providing for the transfer of ownership of Ontario International Airport to the Ontario International Airport Authority. The ink on the document certifying the willingness on the part of the megalopolis to make the landmark transfer was barely dry when the Ontario International Airport Authority gave its needed final approval of the agreement on Thursday afternoon.

Both the LA City Council and the airport authority took their respective actions during closed sessions.

"I have long supported this transfer of ownership, and I am proud of the collaboration that delivered these results," said Los Angeles Mayor Eric Garcetti. "I'd like to thank City Council President Herb Wesson for his leadership on this issue, as well as Trade, Commerce and Technology Committee Chairman Bob Blumenfield, and Councilmember Mike Bonin, who authored the motion for this agreement."

The transfer comes 48 years after a joint powers agreement in 1967 between the cities of Ontario and Los Angeles entrusted management of the airport to the larger city, thirty years after Ontario deeded the facility to Los Angeles and five years after Ontario initiated an increasingly acrimonious campaign to wrest ownership back from Los Angeles. That campaign included the filing of a lawsuit against Los Angeles and the corporate entity – Los Angeles World See P 14

War Brews As Lake Arrowhead Encroaches On Hesperia's Land Use Authority

Hostilities are on the brink of breaking out between two of San Bernardino County's communities over one's effort to establish a medium scale renewable energy project within the other's jurisdiction.

In terms of population, Hesperia, with 90,173 residents, is the seventh largest of San Bernardino County's 24 incorporated municipalities. In terms of land area, at 72 square miles, it is the county's second largest city. Lake Arrowhead is not an incorporated city, but it does have a sizable population. A slowly progressing move is afoot to create San Bernardino County's 25th incorporated municipality, tentatively to be named Lake Arrowhead, with Lake Arrowhead at its center and encompassing the outlying areas of Crestine, Running Springs, Arrowbear, Green Valley Lake, Skyforest, Rim Forest, Twin Peaks, Blue Jay and Cedar Glen into a single 40-square mile city. If Lake Arrowhead were to incorporate under those terms, it would be the county's eleventh largest city geographically, and with 30,327 residents, the seventeenth largest city in the county population-wise, ahead of Needles, Big Bear, Grand Terrace, Yucca Valley, Loma Linda, Barstow and Twenty-nine Palms.

There is a unique relationship between Lake Arrowhead and Hesperia. Lying at an elevation of 5,174 feet in the San Bernardino Mountains, Lake Arrowhead is built around Lake Arrowhead Reservoir, a man-made lake created by the Arrowhead Lake Company, a Los Angeles syndicate, which constructed the Lake Arrowhead Dam and its accompanying facilities between 1904 and 1922 as part of a plan to develop the area into a resort and provide irrigation water to the San Bernardino Valley. The dam is built on Little Bear Creek. Little Bear Creek and the melting snowpack from the mountain area in and surrounding Lake Arrowhead which See P 3

County Gives Company $11k Per Month Bonus To Ensure Desert Ambulance Service

The county board of supervisors this week approved augmenting the sole-source contract it currently maintains with an ambulance service provider with an $11,000 per month payment to ensure the delivery of advanced life support ambulance service in a remote desert area of the county, the most heavily traveled part of which is the I-15 Freeway to Las Vegas.

The company in question is Baker Emergency Medical Services, Inc., with which the board of supervisors on September 28, 2004 approved a performance-based contract, making Baker Emergency Medical Services, Inc. the provider of advanced life services in what is designated as County's Exclusive Operating Area 23, which serves the greater Baker area but extends from approximately 20 miles south of the town of Baker to the California/Nevada state-line, and as far west as approximately 3 miles east of Trona, with the majority of transports occurring along the I-15 corridor from Baker to Stateline. "This area is a very low population density area, with the total number of advanced life services transports totaling 350 in 2012," said San Bernardino County Chief Executive Officer Greg Devereaux. "This extremely low volume can be challenging for advanced life support providers who are required to provide 24/7 coverage, as is the case for Baker Emergency Medical Services, Inc. As a result of the Exclusive Operating Area 23 challenges, combined with more recent changes seen in the emergency medical service reimbursement environment that has resulted in decreased revenues, Baker Emergency Medical Services, Inc has communicated to the county its concerns regarding its ability to continue to provide advanced life support services in Ex- See P 3

County Loses Money It Put Up For Cedar Glen Fire Repairs In State RDA Fund Seizure from front page

Finance made a determination that all the money in the county redevelopment agency's accounts, including the $9 million remaining from the county loan, would be allocated to local taxing entities.

The terms of the legislation shuttering the redevelopment agencies required that any legal challenge to the California Department of Finance's determination had to be filed in Sacramento Superior Court. The county challenged the Department of Finance's determination with regard to the Cedar Glen loan, filing suit on February 27, 2013. On May 24, 2013, the judge hearing the case, Sacramento County Superior Court Eugene L. Balonon, held a hearing on the matter. On July 24, 2013 Balonon entered a judgment upholding the California Department of Finance.

On December 20, 2013, attorneys for San Bernardino County and the successor agency to the county redevelopment agency – County Counsel Jean-Rene Basle, assistant county counsel Michelle Blakemore, and attorneys Amy Hoyt, J. Leah Castella, Susan Bloch and Nicholas Muscolino with the Oakland office of the Burke, Williams and Sorenson law firm – filed an appeal of Balonon's ruling with the Third District Court of Appeal. Michael Cohen, in his official capacity as director of the State of California Department of Finance, was named as the respondent.

According to the legal brief filed on December 20, 2013 "The Department of Finance's determination that the $9 million county loan must be allocated to local taxing entities is unconstitutional. The Department of Finance's determination violates Article XIII Section 25.5(a) of the California Constitution because it changes local agencies' pro rata shares of property tax revenue. The Department of Finance's determination violates Article XIII Section 24 because it reallocates the county's general fund money to other local agencies."

The brief further states, "This case involves the county's efforts to construct infrastructure that would provide basic services – water, roadways, and fire protection – to the residents of Cedar Glen, a community devastated by a catastrophic wildfire in 2003. The Department of Finance has thwarted those efforts through an arbitrary and capricious determination that a $10 million loan that the county made in 2005 from its general fund to the county redevelopment agency to finance the infrastructure improvements and that remains largely unspent cannot be used for its intended purposes and instead must be distributed to local taxing entities. This determination delivers a one two punch to the county: the county urgently needs the funds to complete the improvements to protect the community from the next wildfire. It will only recover those funds, if at all, over a protracted period. Meanwhile, the Department of Finance has given a windfall to other local taxing entities that have no entitlement to money from the county's general fund. The loans are enforceable obligations that must be spent in accordance with the loan agreement and repaid to the county. The reallocation is plainly inequitable because it gives the other taxing entities a windfall of county general funds to which they have no claim whatsoever. The loan is needed to undertake the improvements that are required before most property owners can rebuild the homes destroyed in the Old Fire since most roads are now unusable and without a dependable water system owners do not want to take a chance at building without fire service protection."

implement the [redevelopment agency] dissolution law, the Department of Finance has gone too far. It has ordered the transfer of county general fund money that the county loaned to the county redevelopment agency years earlier to finance sorely needed fire, water and road improvements for an area devastated by wild fires."

In a published opinion, the Third District Court of Appeal rejected the county's contentions "that the determination of the Department of Finance (1) violated the constitutional prohibitions on the state's reallocation of tax revenues; (2) improperly concluded that the loan is not an enforceable obligation; and (3) was inequitable."

By early 2012, the San Bernardino County Special Districts Department had completed only phase I of the project, a portion of phase II and about half of the fire hydrants for the Cedar Glen area when the California Supreme Court turned back a coalition of California cities' challenge to the 2011 legislation and shuttered all redevelopment agencies. The county maintained the $10 million loan to fund the Cedar Glen Disaster Recovery Redevelopment Project was tax revenue and under the California Constitution could not be reallocated by the state. Though it acknowledged the money for the project came from the county with the intention of being used toward the outlined Cedar Glen project, the Third Appellate naturally flows to the north cascades down the north side of the San Bernardino Mountains to become Deep Creek and the headwaters of the Mojave River, which lies at the southeastern extreme of Hesperia. Hesperia is thus the first upstream location on the Mojave River.

The Arrowhead Lake Association controls and maintains the lake for the recreational use and the Lake Arrowhead Community Services District withdraws water from the lake for treatment and distribution to local residents in the San Bernardino Mountains for potable use. The Lake Arrowhead Community Services District owns property located in Hesperia adjacent to the Mojave River which the district uses for the discharge of treated wastewater delivered to that spot via a pipeline that runs down the north side of the San Bernardino Mountains. More than a year ago, the Lake Arrowhead Community Services District Board began looking into the feasibility of establishing a one megawatt solar power generating farm on the property the district owns in Hesperia as a way of reducing, in the long run, its electricity costs.

The general concept is for the district to operate the solar field on roughly five acres there and provide the electricity to Southern California Edison, which is by state law required to accept and/or purchase electricity from any renewable energy source. Rather than accept payment for the electricity, however, the Lake Arrowhead Community Services District intends to obtain purchase credits for electricity with Edison instead and then use those credits to offset the cost of purchasing electricity at its facilities in the mountains.

For reasons that are not fully clear, district officials elected to move ahead with the permitting and environmental review of the project on the district's own authority despite the consideration that the solar farm will be located not in Lake Arrowhead's jurisdiction but rather within that of Hesperia. Instead of making an application with the City of Hesperia through its development services/planning division, the district last spring contracted with a consultant to prepare what was titled "Initial Study for the Hesperia Farms Site Solar Facility Project." The upshot of that study was a recommendation that, using its own authority, the district issue a document known as a mitigated negative declaration, which, in essence, asserts that any environmental impacts from the project will be mitigated by virtue of elements incorporated into the project, such that there will be no negative environmental impacts to the project property or that around it. The board then released the mitigated negative declaration/initial study available for review on April 22, 2015 and gave the public a month, until May 22, 2015 to submit in writing any comments or protests to the document. This, the district maintained, met a crucial element of the public disclosure and public comment requirement for the approval of the project.

Simultaneously, the district contracted with SunPower Inc. to install the photovoltaic arrays for the proposed solar project. On July 28, 2015, the district authorized its first financial security posting, a payment of $45,560 to Southern California Edison.

On August 25, 2015, the Lake Arrowhead Community Services District Board unanimously authorized its general manager, Leo Havener, to execute the generator interconnection agreement with Southern California Edison.

On September 8, 2015, the Lake Arrowhead Community Services District authorized the first payment for the distribution provider's interconnection facility costs of $21,940.

At its October 28 meeting, Lake Arrowhead Community Services District voted in favor of contracting with Tom Dodson & Associates at a cost of $17,200 to "create a detailed project description" and "prepare an air quality technical study" including greenhouse gas generation, along with "a biology study focused on the presence of the

A candidate for public office was asked why he was running for election. "Well," he intoned very seriously, "I looked around and I saw all of these other politicians engaged in self-serving behavior; I saw the greed; I saw the graft; I saw the corruption; I saw the violations of the public's trust and these charlatans cheating the public and getting rich. So, I said to myself, 'Why not me?'"

A man and woman were walking through a cemetery. They were taking their time, reading each tombstone before going on to the next. They came to one. On it was inscribed the deceased's name, his year of birth and year of death and two descriptions. The first was "An Honest Man." The second was "A Politician." "Oh, look," said the wife to her husband. "There are two people buried in that grave."

The workman was hanging a sign outside of Congress. It read, "Solicitors, fakers and grafters will not be permitted in the House."

Just then a senator happened by. "Better strike out grafters," he said, "or we'll never be able to raise a quorum."

council with regard to the property in question.

"It is a very complicated situation," councilman Charley Glasper said.

At issue are two recent votes by the city council, one in public and one behind closed doors, as well as a longstanding restrictions placed on the city by the state over illegal action perpetrated by city officials long ago that continues to haunt the community.

In the early and mid-1990s, the cities of Adelanto and Victorville had competing proposals for the civilian conversion of George Air Force Base, which was shuttered by the Department of Defense in 1992. The City of Victorville was contesting Adelanto's claim to the air base property and there were considerable legal fees involved. Adelanto illicitly tapped into redevelopment money to pay its legal fees. When the State of California learned of this, Adelanto was sanctioned, as redevelopment money consisting of both dedicated property tax revenue as well as the pro-

If Baker Emergency Medical Services, Inc. was to terminate service, Exclusive Operating Area 23 would be left with no public or private advanced life support ambulances in close proximity to respond to emergencies. In order to ensure that advanced life support services continue uninterrupted in Exclusive Operating Area 23 while the county explores a permanent solution to the problem, it is recommended that the county enter into an agreement with Baker Emergency Medical Services, Inc., separate from its Performance-Based Contract No. 04-1028 for Exclu-

This contract can be terminated by either party, for any reason, with a 30-day notice. The county will continue to explore all options to ensure that the long-term safety of the public is maintained."

The contract pertains to keeping the advanced life support service equipment and facilities in place in the Baker area on a month-to-month basis, for the period of January 1, 2016 through December 31, 2016, in the amount of $11,000 per month, for a total amount not to exceed $132,000.

burrowing owl" as well as a "cultural resources study." Tom Dosdson & Associates is to prepare an "initial study" and publish and distribute the document for public review and comment.

On Monday, December 14, Dave Reno, Hesperia's principal planner wrote a letter to Leo Havener, the Lake Arrowhead Community Services District's general manager, in which he took issue with some elements of the project and the district's pre-emption of the city's planning and land use authority. Reno's letter did not foreclose the possibility of the city approving the project, but made clear the city's contention that the city's land use regulation and permitting processes needed to be respected.

"The city is aware of a pending action item on your December 15, 2015 board of directors agenda regarding the solar farm proposed for the district's property located east of Arrowhead Lake Road," Reno wrote. "The city's development code classifies this use as a solar farm. Section 16.16.063(B) specifies that solar farms are not permitted within 660 feet of any agricultural or residentially designated property. In order to facilitate approval of this project, the district's property would have to be reclassified as public institutional overlay, which is possible given the district's ownership of the site. In addition, a conditional use permit would be required to evaluate the design and location of the project and to permit the city to make the necessary environmental findings, which could be justified by the district's initial study and proposed negative declaration. Finally, the location of the solar farm within the district's property would have to be adjusted to be at least 660 feet from the property's boundary in order to comply with the city's distance requirements.

This is possible as Lake Arrowhead Community Services District appears to have adequate land upon which to locate the solar farm."

Reno continued, "It is clear from the memorandum associated with this item that the Lake Arrowhead Community Services District intends to vote to invalidate the city's zoning ordinance and proceed with the project without regard of the city's zoning ordinance, as well as any review of construction permits and inspections. The city disagrees with this position for several reasons. Section 53091(d) of the Government Code specifies that building ordinances of a city shall not apply to the location or construction of facilities for the production, generation or transmission of electrical energy by a local agency. However, Lake Arrowhead Community Services District is not a local agency created for the purpose of generating electrical energy. Therefore, the Government Code is inapplicable, given the public services provided by Lake Arrowhead Community Services District.

"Subsection (e) further specifies that zoning ordinances of a city shall apply to facilities for this storage or transmission of electrical energy," Reno's missive continues, "if the zoning ordinances of the city make provision for these facilities. As indicated above, the city's zoning ordinance classifies the use as a solar farm subject to the city's discretionary review. In addition, the solar farm is designed for the transmission of energy into the local grid as indicated by the project description in the initial study. The energy to be generated by the solar farm is not being used for the district's facilities. Its purpose is to transmit energy into the grid in order to gain credits for district wide operations. As such, the city's codes are applicable and discretionary approval of a conditional use permit is necessary before the project may proceed. Finally, the city disagrees with the finding that there is no feasible alternative to the location of the project.

As indicated above, the district has ample land upon which to relocate the facility to meet the city's distance requirement from residential or agricultural zoning."

Reno's letter ended on a cooperative note. "The city is interested in working with the Lake Arrowhead Community Services District to facilitate the review and approval of the required general plan amendment and conditional use permit for the proposed solar farm in accordance with the city's code and ordinances," the letter states, and closes with an invitation for Havener to contact Reno.

No such contact was made, however, and the following day, on December 15, the Lake Arrowhead Community Services District Board voted to adopt a resolution to move ahead with the project, making findings that the solar project undertaking by the district constituted an electrical utility and that there was no feasible alternative site, rendering the City of Hesperia's ordinance inapplicable, and adopting the final negative declaration under the California Environmental Quality Act.

Some Lake Arrowhead residents have suggested that the district board was skittish about submitting itself to the City of Hesperia's planning and land use approval processes because of two previous cases in which the City of Hesperia denied applications for solar facilities, one on Rock Springs Road that was deemed too close to neighboring residential properties and another proposed by San Bernardino County close to State Highway 15. Moreover, the district may not have wanted to apply for permitting with the city because to do so could be interpreted as acknowledging that the city had final permitting and land use authority with regard to the property.

Lake Arrowhead Community Services Board Member John Wurm told the Sentinel, that "It is my understanding the city had a timeline to file an objection and they didn't file it in a timely manner. They did not meet the deadline to notify us they did not agree with us proceeding with the project."

With regard to Reno's letter, Wurm gave indication that he interpreted Hesperia's position to be that the city wanted the solar farm to be located on district property outside of Hesperia, i.e., in the San Bernardino Mountains. "There's a lot of procedural aspects raised in it," Wurm said of Reno's letter. "The only substantive comment is that they believed we had ample land to locate the facility elsewhere. We had no feasible alternative to the location of the project. In the mountains there are a fair amount of clouds. Up here can be one of the foggiest places around. Hesperia has a fair amount of sunshine. Locating a solar facility in the desert is far more feasible than in the mountains, due to the lack of sunshine. The district has pretty inten-

Court found that "the agreements, contracts, or arrangements made between the county that created the redevelopment agency and the redevelopment agency itself were "unenforceable" and accordingly under the 2011 legislation any funds remaining unspent, i.e., the $9 million, were "available for distribution to local taxing agencies." The appellate court stated "Once that money was transferred by the county, it was not tax revenue, even if the county had some say in how the funds were spent."

With respect to the county's contention that its loan to the Cedar Glen Disaster Recovery Redevelopment Agency was an enforceable obligation because it included third party beneficiaries, i.e., the ratepayers of Cedar Glen, the appellate court found that the county's loan agreement "did not identify anyone or any entity by name" as a beneficiary and there was no exception in the statute.

The county's assertion that "equity demands that the unspent county loan funds be returned to the county" and their distribution to taxing entities that had not contributed toward the original generation of the money "unjust enrichment," the appellate court said there was no basis upon which to "veto the Legislature's taxing and fiscal policy decisions based on the equitable doctrine of unjust enrichment."

Billy Holcomb: Adventurer, 49er, Bear Killer & Public Official

While neither a founder nor original inhabitant of San Bernardino followed by a wave of Mormon settlers into the area. They made a vast

Billy Holcomb

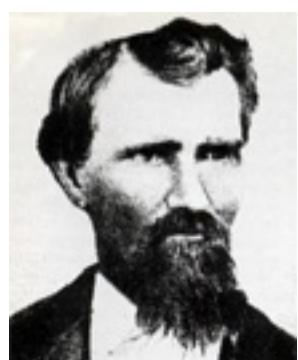

County, Billy Holcomb is perhaps the one individual responsible for its having been resurrected as an early population center and destination for the second generation of pioneers after the original American settlers of the region, the Mormons, in significant measure abandoned it.

William Frances Holcomb was born in Tippecanoe County, Indiana on January 27, 1831. At about age 18, he migrated with many other young men in the California Gold Rush for a chance of riches. He suffered adversity, though, and his was not an instantaneous success story. His party had many difficulties. At the Green River crossing on the Sublette Cutoff in present-day Wyoming, he lost his wagon and entire outfit. His oxen drowned. He eventually reached Placerville in Northern California after traveling on foot for over 1,000 miles. He failed in his attempts at mining in the Sierra Nevada gold fields and later in the Kern River fields. He went to Oregon for a while, then went down to Southern California.

Meanwhile, a sizable Mormon Party had been dispatched from Salt Lake City in 1851 and arrived in San Bernardino that same year. This was

"Starvation Flatts" by its discouraged group of miners, who were finding little. Soon after Holcomb's arrival, one of the miners panned some gold from under the pine trees a few hundred feet up the hillside, giving encouragement to the small band of miners working claims in the area.

Like the others, Holcomb suffered from the lack of supplies and minimal gold finds in the rural mountain community. Called "the best sharpshooter west of the Mississippi," Holcomb was asked by the miners to shoot some of the grizzly bears living in the area for their meat. Holcomb was able to bring back dead bears to feed the starving miners. He was nicknamed "Grizzly Bill" because he was known to have killed many bears. He was said to have finished off all the bears in the Bear Valley.

While tracking the bears, Holcomb kept his eye out for gold, and he took chunks of likely rock. About five miles from Bear Valley, he discovered gold. On May 5, 1860, Holcomb and Ben Ware arrived at the office of the county recorder to record five gold claims located in the Holcomb Valley five miles north of Bear Valley. That spring, the Bear Valley miners chipped in and sent Martin to San Bernardino for flour. The people of San Bernardino were accustomed to believing there was little gold or luck to be had in Bear Valley. But when Martin paid for the flour with gold dust, word spread quickly and several men in San Bernardino followed him back to the Valley that now bears Holcomb's name.

When he uncovered the placer gold deposits in Holcomb Valley, Holcomb did more than anything else to attract people to San Bernardino County. Within six months after his discovery there were 2,000 men in the valley, which lies in the adjacent mountains, just north of Bear Valley, now one of the great summer and winter resorts of Southern California.

Those with gold fever rushed to mine the rich sand and shale placers, and miners founded the short-lived boom town of Belleville there. For ten years it was the third or fourth largest town in Southern California. Holcomb Valley turned out to be the source of more gold than any other part of Southern California and was deemed such a valuable asset to the nation that Abraham Lincoln dispatched union soldiers there to make sure it did not fall into the hands of the Confederacy.

Holcomb was elected the first justice of the peace at Belleville, but he soon resigned to devote more time to his mines.

With his financial future appearing secured, Holcomb married Nancy Stewart and built a house in San Bernardino. Nancy Stewart had come across the plains with her father from Utah. They had five sons and two daughters. His sons were William Jr., John, Michael, Steven, and Matthew. His daughters were Kathryn Holcomb and Annie "Angel", who died of Scarlet fever in her infancy.

He returned to San Bernardino during the fall of 1861, where his house was destroyed by the flood of 1862. Holcomb returned to mining in the mountains that summer to make up for his losses. In 1863 he moved for more than a year to the vicinity of Prescott, Arizona, where he mined and hunted.

Unable to part with his adventuresome spirit and his affinity for hunting and mining despite his newfound wealth, Holcomb continued to prospect in numerous places, from Vancouver, British Columbia, to Arizona. He was one of the discoverers of the famous Vulture Mine in Arizona, from which more than $8 million was taken. He sold a third interest in this property for $1,000, and afterward, in recalling the experience, he referred with a quiet humor rather than any bitterness to the fact that he was cheated out of half the amount of the sale. His partner at the time was Dick Gird, discoverer of the mines at Tombstone, Arizona.

Upon returning to San of action secured some logging chains and, accompanied by a number of deputy sheriffs, went to the Santa Fe depot and proceeded to make an attachment. The most available property was a locomotive standing on the main track in front of the depot. The wheels were secured with the chains and he placed padlocks on them and then left the deputies in charge until the law should be complied with. This summary action naturally caused great excitement among railroad officials, and there was a tremendous buzzing of telegraph wires until the necessary orders could be complied with for paying off the tax. This incident was in a manner characteristic of the West, and especially of the upright and straightforward character of William F. Holcomb."

In 1882 Holcomb was elected the county clerk.

Following his services as county assessor and county clerk, Holcomb became a merchant in San Bernardino.

His son William Winfield Holcomb was a San Bernardino native, where he was educated in the public schools. He served as a deputy clerk under his father, later engaged in the lumber business, and following that for many years was a feed and fuel merchant.

He then resumed an official routine as deputy sheriff.

William W. Holcomb married at Santa Maria Miss Isabella Grant, a native of San Bernardino and daughter of John and Margaret (Nish) Grant, farmers and cattle raisers.

Cash-Strapped Adelanto's Bargain Basement Sale Of Property Raises Suspicions

ceeds from bonds sold to investors was specifically designated for efforts to construct infrastructure and eliminate blight. Federal security law requires that bond proceeds in particular be utilized for the purposes listed on the bond documents. The State of California accordingly moved to ensure that certain of the city's redevelopment agency assets be subject to restrictions that would ensure that upon the sale of those assets, the sale proceeds would be utilized to pay the bondholders. Among the city's redevelopment agency assets was acreage lying within the City of Adelanto's industrial park. In 2011, when redevelopment agencies statewide were shuttered, a successor agency to each city's redevelopment agency was formed and redevelopment agency funds could only be used by the successor agency to pay legally recognized redevelopment debts, with any remaining money in redevelopment accounts to be remitted by the successor agency to the county auditor-controller, so they could in turn be distributed to the local agencies that shared territory with the former redevelopment agency. In Adelanto's case, it was yet subject to oversight by the California State Department of Finance with regard to the misuse of its redevelopment money in the 1990s. The state had encouraged the city to formulate a long range property management plan to continue to make whole the bond investors harmed by the city's previous action. As part of its Department of Finance-approved long range property management plan, Adelanto proposed to sell three properties within its industrial park with a combined size of 47.04 acres. Last month, the City of Adelanto - which is severely cash strapped, having declared a fiscal emergency two years ago and is yet teetering on the brink of bankruptcy - passed an ordinance allowing for the operation of medical marijuana cultivation facilities within, and only within, its industrial park. There was a stampede of proposals to obtain the permits for such operations, which put the properties in the industrial park in high demand. Last week, the city council in a closed session sold the 47.04 acres of property in its industrial zone that was formerly owned by its redevelopment agency for the price of $375,000 - i.e., $7,972 per acre - to Newport Beach-based Kojima Development, Inc. This astounded the community, as that was less than the $1,023,041 the city had paid for the property and it was apparent to everyone that the ordinance passed last month had escalated the value of the city's industrial park property to a level likely well above that for industrial park property in the region. There were immediate suggestions that Kojima had paid off members of the city council, city management and even the newly appointed city attorney, Julia Sylva. It did not help matters that the availability of the property for sale had not been widely publicized and that the vote to ratify the sale took place outside the view of the public, behind closed doors. After Sylva announced the sale, the city was inundated with "late" offers on the 47.04 acres that dwarfed the $375,000 figure.

In response, members of the city council maintain that they were not at liberty to do anything other with the property than what they did. They say they could not have held onto the property and leased it, an option which might have generated considerable revenue for the city and provided money to pay the bondholders stiffed back in the 1990s when the city misused the redevelopment money. City officials maintain they were under mandate from the state and the Department of Finance to sell the property. Moreover, they claim, they were unable to sell the property to the highest bidder but were mandated to sell the property at a price of $375,000, a figure that matched an appraisal carried out previously plus fees. That appraisal was carried out before the marijuana cultivation ordinance was passed and went into effect.

Among those registering the highest level of outrage over the city's action was Marc O'Hara, the director of the Patient Care Alliance, which is among the entities having applied for a cultivation operation license. He subsequently told the city council he and his financiers would have been prepared to pay far in excess of the $375,000 for the 47.04 acres, stating that real estate professionals estimated the actual value of the property as being in the $300,000 per acre range.

At once, a cacophony of competing offers for the purchase of the property - ranging from $7 million to $12 million to $14 million - was heard.

As if to add insult to injury, reports floated in and then Kojima's legal representative, attorney Mary Lynn K. Coffee of the Nossaman Law Firm, confirmed that Kojima was negotiating with prospective marijuana cultivation operation owners over leasing of the property. Word that yearly leases for facilities at the industrial park with square footage of one acre under roof would run to over $150,000 per year raised even greater hackles. It appeared that Kojima, not the city, would be the beneficiary of the city's controversial move to be the first city in the state to permit marijuana to be commercially grown within its city limits. The $7,000 permit application fees the city would charge to would-be growers was a comparative pittance to the million dollars per year or more that Kojima stood to rake in annually by simply leasing property to those growers. Why, critics and suspicious residents asked, had the city not held onto the property and simply leased it out itself? A siege mentality descended over City Hall. In response to questions about what was going on, city officials referred citizens and the press to city attorney Julia Sylva. Sylva met those questions with stony silence.

The Sentinel managed to reach two council members, Charley Glasper and John Woodard, both of whom consented to try to allay the mounting concern over the matter.

Woodard insisted the city's sale of the property was a good thing rather than a bad thing.

"Our mayor went to Sacramento to get the power that will allow us to sell that land so our city can develop it," Woodard said. "It behooves us to do what we can to sell that land to developers so we can get point of sale [i.e., sales tax], restaurants and stores. We made a deal with Kojima and now others are begging us to wait while they go find the money to beat their offer. People like Marc O'Hara want us to back up and sell it to them for $14 million. If we say we'll wait to see if he has the millions of dollars more and he doesn't come through, we waste another month."

Gasper said those criticizing the council and city management over the sale were doing so out of ignorance.

"A long time ago, in 1992 or 1993 or 1994, the city's redevelopment authority had already been taken away," Glasper said. "It had something to do with misusing redevelopment money for legal fees. More than twenty years later we had redevelopment land left over. We had to get permission from the state to sell it. It was evaluated at $375,000. That is the price we had to sell it for. The city gets nothing for the sale. We were under a mandate from the State of California. We could only sell at that price. We are not a redevelopment type city. That was something done in the 1990s. We borrowed illegally. We did not have the privilege of investing redevelopment money unless we got the permission from the state, which we did. The best we could do is offer that land to the buyer at current market value. It was appraised at $325,000 or $350,000 or $375,000, I'm not quite sure, but it was below $400,000. The person or company who applied to buy that was under a 24 hour time frame to submit its bid to the city manager. If we had our full redevelopment authority and were not under punishment by the state to only do what they directed us to do, which was to sell it, I am not saying we could have not gotten more for the 47 acres. That is what we had to sell it for. We are not getting anything for selling it. The person who buys it can now get it appraised for four million dollars or $14 million and sell it accordingly. That is what is happening. People might not understand, but at this point I don't care if they understand or not. We are getting punished for using that redevelopment authority to borrow illegally to use it as legal fees to get George Air Force Base. That happened way before I came onto the council in 2004. So that is the story in a nutshell as best as I can tell you. These people who are saying something different are just plain wrong. The land was there to be sold. The land was released to us and we did just that, under the guidance of the state. I'm not saying had it been a circumstance where we were free and clear we could not have gotten millions of dollars for that. But even if we had gotten millions for it we would've needed to turn it over to the state. It is very complicated. We are being punished for something that happened way back, for the sins of the past committed by a previous city council, people who are dead and gone now. The people who purchased that land from the city can go out and get it reappraised and sell it at the price they can get. But we were just following instructions. Now people are saying we're a bunch of hicks and we could have gotten millions for that land. We probably could have, but we didn't have the authority to do that, as much as I wish we did."

Woodard, a real estate broker, likewise said the city was restricted in what it could do. He said the city had contemplated exploiting its control of the property in the context of the recently passed marijuana cultivation operation ordinance. Continued on Page 13 sive electrical needs, 24 hours a day, seven days a week. We are always pumping water someplace. The district uses a tremendous amount of electricity to pump water and wastewater uphill."

Wurm said the city's contention that neighboring property owners were opposed to the project were questionable. "There were no complaints from adjoining landowners, based on my understanding,"

he said.

Efforts by the Sentinel to have Havener address the prospect of Hesperia filing suit against the district were unsuccessful. Such a danger is real not just because of the tendency of governmental entities to protect and assert their jurisdictional purview but also because Hesperia residents displeased with the presence of the solar field could sue Hesperia for not exercising its regulatory authority over the district to get compliance with city zoning codes.

on the market recently "at $1.50 per square foot to give some type of negotiating room for potential clients."

Shortly after the city council passed the marijuana cultivation ordinance, Brady said, "Mr. Ed Dunagan, who is the owner of the Adelanto Industrial Park, had subdivided a 5± acre (gross property) into seven parcels, one of 34,000± square feet with estimated floor space of 12,000± square feet; a second of 20,000± square feet with estimated floor space of 13,000± square feet; a third of 18,000± square feet with estimated floor space of 11,000± square feet; a fourth of 31,320± square feet with estimated floor space of 10,000± square feet; a fifth of 18,980± square feet with estimated floor space of 11,000± square feet; a sixth of 20,380± square feet with estimated floor space of 13,000± square feet; and a seventh of 33,000± square feet with estimated floor space of 12,000± square feet. These properties sold somewhere between $12± per square feet and $14± per square feet. I've never seen anything like this."

Brady continued, "I am not in any position either personally or professionally to question why the Adelanto City Council, or senior staff, through its former redevelopment agency plan and the State of California, would elect to sell Industrial Park 4 for such an inexpensive amount of money. That's obviously a subject that the taxpayers and residents of the City of Adelanto will have to have with the City Council of the City of Adelanto as we have now seen in a very short period of time some 'crazy' sales occur due to the new ordinance allowing for the cultivation of marijuana."

The Sentinel obtained this statement from a press representative for Kojima: "The Nossaman Law Firm represents only the developer, and no one else. To determine the availability of the property the developer actively monitored and relied on publicly available information on the city's website. Based on that publicly available information, the developer, and anyone else monitoring the city's website, learned that on November 23, the City had the second reading of Ordinance 539 [pertaining to permitting marijuana cultivation facilities], meaning that the ordinance was formally adopted [and] on November 24, the [Adelanto redevelopment bond] oversight board submitted a revised long range management plan to the State Department of Finance, meaning that the state would soon issue the approvals necessary for sale of the property."

According to the spokesman, "In response to that public information, the developer submitted a binding offer and executed purchase and sale agreement to the city for consideration. Anyone else could have done the same thing had they been monitoring the city's website Under Section 2.1 of the Purchase and Sale Agreement, which is a public document, the developer is required to pay the higher of $375,000 or the fair market value of the property as determined by an independent appraisal. The developer did not receive a bargain price. The city has no risk under the agreement of selling the property for less than fair market value."

Furthermore, the spokesman, who asked not to be publicly identified, said, "The statements and allegations being made against the developer regarding the sale, and inducements to the city or its representatives in exchange for sale of the property, are patently untrue."

The purchase and sale agreement does contain a provision that yet leaves open the possibility that the city might receive from Kojima more than $375,000 for the 47.04 acres.

Under Section 2 of the agreement, which bears the subheading Purchase Price And Payment; Seller Financing, it states in subsection 2.1, "Purchaser shall be required to obtain and submit to seller prior to the end of the inspection period an independent, written appraisal of the property. In the event the new appraisal indicates a value equal to or less than the current purchase price, there shall be no change to the purchase price. In the event the new appraisal indicates a value of more than the current purchase price, the purchase price shall be increased to reflect the property value specified in the new appraisal."

Woodard told the Sentinel. "While this is still in escrow an appraiser will reassess its value. As of our agreement in effect now, it is to sell for $375,000. But before escrow closes it could actually sell for today's market value. Kojima is going to get a little sticker shock when they find out how much it will be."

Asked what the final price will be, Woodard said, "It's hard for me to say. I'm a real estate broker. I'm not an appraiser." When pressed, he said, "My guess is it is going to be over $2 million."

Holcomb's grandson, Grant Holcomb, was born at San Bernardino and was educated in the grammar and high schools of that city, graduating from high school in 1907. While in high school he was a member of the San Bernardino National Guard. He entered Stanford University, from which he received his A. B. degree in 1911, and in 1913 graduated with a J.D. degree. He was admitted to the bar the same year, and had a general practice, though specializing in probate work. He was attorney for the San Bernardino Auto Trades Association, and had his offices in the Garner Building at and Court streets. Mr. Holcomb was a director of the California State Bank and of the Gill Storage Battery Company. He was a charter member of the Rotary Club and served that club as a director, was a director of the chamber of commerce, and a member of the Young Men's Christian Association, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, Independent Order of Odd Fellows and Delta Chi college fraternity. He was treasurer of the Baptist Church and went on to serve as the mayor of San Bernardino from 1925 through 1927. Griz-

Billy Holcomb died in 1909. He lives on in the memory of many, and one of his legacies is that the Southern California chapter of E Clampus Vitus is named in his honor.

In 1967, fewer than 200,000 passengers passed through Ontario Airport's gates. At that point it had a flea infested gravel parking lot. Los Angeles, with its control over gate positions at Los Angeles International Airport, used that leverage to induce more airlines to land at and depart from Ontario.

Hummingbirds

Hummingbirds are New World birds of the family Trochilidae. They are among the smallest of birds, with some no more than three inches in length, and the largest measuring at roughly five inches. The smallest extant bird species is the one-and-one-third inch long bee hummingbird, which weighs less than 2.5 grams.

Hovering in mid-air through high speed wing-flapping featuring nearly fifty strokes per second, they make a humming sound audible to humans. They are capable of flying as fast as 35 miles per hour, both frontwards and backwards. They have extremely high metabolisms, such that with the exception of insects, hummingbirds while in flight have the highest metabolism of all animals, a necessity to support the rapid beating of their wings during hovering and fast forward flight. Their heart rate can reach as high as 1,260 beats per minute, with a breathing rate of 250 breaths per minute. During flight, oxygen consumption per gram of muscle tissue in a hummingbird is about 10 times higher than that seen for elite human athletes. Hummingbirds, which are continuously hours away from starving to death, consume more than their own weight in nectar each day, and to do so they must visit hundreds of flowers. They can make use of ingested sugars to fuel hovering flight within 30–45 minutes of consumption, oxidizing sugar in flight muscles rapidly and reserving their limited fat stores to sustain them overnight or to power migratory flights.

The dynamic range of metabolic rates in hummingbirds requires them to have superpowerful kidney function that can be slowed or stopped when it is undergoing water deprivation, a physiological mechanism unique to hummingbirds.

Prior to nonstop flight across hundreds of miles during migration, a hummingbird will store fat as a fuel reserve, doubling its weight by as much as 100 percent, increasing potential flying time over open water.

Hummingbirds are capable of conserving energy when inactive or not foraging for food by going into torpor, a hibernation-like, deep sleep state known as torpor needed to prevent energy reserves from falling to a critical level. During night-time torpor, body temperature falls from 104 degrees Fahrenheit to 40 to 154 degrees Fahrenheit, with heart and breathing rates both slowed dramatically. Body mass declines throughout nocturnal torpor, amounting to about 10% of weight loss each night. Their hormone, corticosterone, is one signal that arouses a hummingbird from torpor.

There are 338 recognized species of hummingbirds, which fall into nine main clades, the Topazes, Hermits, Mangoes, Brilliants, Colettes, Patagona, Mountain Gems, Bees, and Emeralds, defining their relationship to nectar-bearing flowering plants and the birds' continued spread into new geographic areas.

All hummingbirds depend on flower nectar to fuel their high metabolisms and hovering flight. The various species have made evolutionary adaptations to coordinate bill shape to flower shape. Hummingbirds appear to have originally evolved from insectivorous swifts (family Apodidae) and treeswifts (family Hemiprocnidae) about 42 million years ago, based in part due to a key adaptative mutation of an altered taste receptor that enabled hummingbirds to seek nectar.

In traditional taxonomy, hummingbirds are placed in the order Apodiformes, which also contains the swifts. However, some taxonomists have separated them into their own order, the Trochiliformes. Hummingbirds' wing bones are hollow and fragile, making fossilization difficult and leaving their evolutionary history poorly documented. Most, but not all, scientists theorize that hummingbirds originated in South America. Hummingbirds exhibit gender dimorphism, in which males are smaller than females in small species, and males are larger than females in large-bodied species. The extent of this sexual size difference varies among clades of hummingbirds. In some clades males and females are similarly sized. In many clades, females have longer, more curved beaks favored for accessing nectar from tall flowers.

Sexual size and beak differences likely evolved due to constraints imposed by courtship because mating displays of male hummingbirds require complex aerial maneuvers and are costly in terms of energy. Males tend to be smaller than females, allowing conservation of energy to forage competitively and participate more frequently in courtship.

Thus, sexual selection will favor smaller male hummingbirds. To augment courtship, many male hummingbirds have plumage with bright, varied coloration. By merely shifting position, feather regions of a muted-looking bird can instantly become fiery red or vivid green. The outer tail feathers of male Anna's hummingbird (Calypte anna) vibrate during courtship display dives and produce a loud chirp. When courting, the male ascends some 35 meters before diving over an interested female at a speed of 88 feet per second, equal to 385 body lengths/second, producing a high-pitched sound.

This downward acceleration during a courting dive is the highest reported for any vertebrate undergoing a voluntary aerial maneuver, resulting in gravitational forces, the level of which equals or exceeds the g-force acceleration that causes near loss of consciousness in fighter pilots during flight of fixed-wing aircraft in a high-speed banked turn.

Hummingbirds can sing at the same frequency as the tail feather chirp, but its small syrinx is not capable of the same volume. The sound is caused by the aerodynamics of rapid air flow past tail feathers, causing them to flutter in a vibration which produces the high-pitched sound of a courtship dive.

Female hummingbirds tend to be larger, requiring more energy, and their beaks longer to access preferred flowers. Female hummingbirds tend to have longer beaks that allow for more effective reach into crevices of tall flowers for nectar. Thus females are better at foraging, acquiring flower nectar, and supporting the energy demands of their larger body size.

Female hummingbirds construct small cup-shaped nests on the branch of a tree or shrub, often using spider silk and lichens to bind the nest material together and secure the structure. Use of silk allows the nest to expand as the young hummingbirds grow. Two white eggs are laid and incubation lasts 14 to 23 days, depending on the species, ambient temperature, and female attentiveness to the nest. The mother feeds her nestlings on small arthropods and nectar by inserting her bill into the open mouth of a nestling, and then regurgitating the food into its crop.

Hummingbird flight has been studied intensively from an aerodynamic perspective using wind tunnels and high-speed video cameras. The birds produce 75% of their weight support during the downstroke and 25% during the upstroke, with the wings making a "figure 8" motion. Hummingbird hovering has been estimated to be 20% more efficient than performed by a helicopter drone.

Male rufous and broad-tailed hummingbirds (genus Selasphorus) have a distinctive wing feature during normal flight that sounds like jingling or a buzzing shrill whistle. The trill arises from air rushing through slots created by the tapered tips of the ninth and tenth primary wing feathers, creating a sound loud enough to be detected by female or competitive male hummingbirds and researchers up to 300 feet away.

Behaviorally, the whistle serves several purposes, including announcing the gender and presence of a male bird, providing audible aggressive defense of feeding territory and an intrusion tactic, enhancing the alerting of a threat, and favoring mate attraction and courtship.

Hummingbirds are specialized nectarivores and are tied to the ornithophilous flowers upon which they feed. Like bees, they are able to assess the amount of sugar in the nectar they eat; they normally reject flower types that produce nectar that is less than 10% sugar and prefer those whose sugar content is higher. Nectar is a mixture of glucose, fructose, and sucrose, and is a poor source of nutrients, so hummingbirds meet their needs for protein, amino acids, vitamins, minerals, etc. by preying on insects and spiders.

Hummingbirds tend to be interested in flowers of a color wavelength ignored by nectar interested insects, which thereby reduces nectar robbing. Hummingbird-pollinated flowers also produce relatively weak nectar (averaging 25% sugars w/w) containing a high proportion of sucrose, whereas insect-pollinated flow-

It's gold out there because the holiday season is sparkling everywhere. This is the neatest weather because it's getting cold in San Bernardino County. To boot, the colorful moment is in the shades of gold. The spirits are lifting because of the lovely gold being reflected in what people are wearing out there. There are golden tops, dresses, sweaters, and shoes. A new variation of gold has also hit the streets and it's called rose gold. This so-called rose gold looks magnificent with black, red, green, and of California and this is really what makes us unique in the Golden State. It can get colder and then suddenly warm again, which offers more opportunity for creativity. With that said, dress up, warm up, and start dashing through the winter season. Until next week, here's to new beginnings that come with the golden magical holiday season.

In relatively short order ridership at Ontario Airport increased dramatically.

All told, Los Angeles instituted some $550 million worth of improvements to the airport, including paving its parking lot, laying down a second and entirely new east-to-west runway over its obsolete northeast-to-southwest landing strip, and modernizing its existing east-to-west runway, including the widening of taxiways and the addition of storm drains. Ontario Airport's landing and take-off paths were converted into the longest such civilian facility in Southern California, and Los Angeles erected a state-of-the-art control tower, and constructed two ultra-modern terminals at a cost of $270 million, augmented with a world class concourse. In 2007, 7.2 million passengers came through Ontario Airport, a 3600 percent increase over what Ontario had been able to achieve on its own 40 years before.

But ridership at Ontario Airport dipped significantly after that, leading to Ontario officials charging that Los Angeles and Los Angeles World Airports were purposefully mismanaging the aerodrome, considered to be a key element of the Inland Empire's economy.

Los Angeles and Ontario put those differences behind them by virtue of the agreement accepted by both this week, under which Ontario will pay $30 million from its reserves, take over the airport's $60 million debt and make payments of $50 million over five years and $70 million in the final five years of a ten-year transition.

"The agreement ensures uninterrupted operations at Ontario International Airport by providing the 191 Los Angeles World Airports employees with key employee protections and stability during the transition," said Deborah Flint, executive director of Los Angeles World Airports. "My staff is committed to working closely and cooperatively with the City of Ontario and the airport authority to allow for a smooth transfer."

ers typically produce more concentrated nectars dominated by fructose and glucose. Hummingbirds eat many small meals and drink with their tongues by rapidly lapping nectar. Their tongues have tubes which run down their lengths and help the hummingbirds drink the nectar.

Hummingbirds are restricted to the Americas from south central Alaska to Tierra del Fuego, including the Caribbean.

Most hummingbirds of the U.S. and Canada migrate southward in fall to spend winter in Mexico, the Caribbean Islands, or Central America. A few southern South American species also move north to the tropics during the southern winter. A few species are year-round residents of California and southwestern desert regions of the USA. Among these are Anna's hummingbird, a common resident from southern Arizona and inland California.
