

After Eight Month Vacancy Munsey Succeeds Hartwig As County Fire Chief

After an eight month vacancy in the position of San Bernardino County fire chief, and ten months after the county's last fire chief announced his intended departure from the post to take up the fire chief's position in Santa Barbara County, the board of supervisors, in consultation with County Chief Executive Officer Gary McBride, reached a consensus on who is to fill the post.

On Wednesday, November 19, Assistant Chief Dan Munsey acceded to the department's top rank. He succeeds former Chief Mark Hartwig, who departed earlier this year for Santa Barbara County and Deputy Fire Chief Don Trapp, who had served in an interim capacity since Hartwig left.

McBride's office made an announcement of the appointment on the county's website on Wednesday.

Munsey began with the county in 1995 as a paid call firefighter. Three years later he was hired into a full-time position with the department, and was assigned to Lake Arrowhead. He promoted to the rank of captain in 2004 and assistant chief in 2014.

While he was assistant chief, Munsey was responsible for rescue operations, fire suppression and emergency medical response in the High Desert region, geographically the largest of the county's five divisions.

Police, Sheriff's Detectives Act To Avert School Shootings In Barstow And Yucaipa

Fast action by law enforcement agencies in two disparate cities of the county may have foreclosed two high school shooting rampages, averting at each a scene like that which occurred at Saugus High School in Santa Clarita on Thursday, November 14, when 16-year-old Nathaniel Berhow killed two students and injured three before turning his gun on himself.

Barstow police served a search warrant at the home of a 13-year-old freshman at Barstow High after multiple individuals alerted them to an Instagram post he had made in which he threatened a school shooting over the weekend.

"The post stated that the subject was armed and implied that there was going to be a school shooting on Tuesday," according to a Barstow Police Department press release.

The department was alerted to the danger late on Sunday. Officers on duty contacted detectives, who made a concerted effort to determine the provenance of the Instagram. Tracing a chain of posts, Detective Thomas Lewis reached a student at the high school who was able to identify who it was that had made the threatening posting.

A warrant was obtained that evening and Detective Lewis and a team of officers served it at the home the boy shared with his parents at 3:10 a.m. Monday morning.

Intrigue Exposed With SB Mayor's Show Of Hostility Toward City Manager

By Mark Gutglueck

Dysfunction, division and personality conflicts at the highest level of San Bernardino municipal government were thrown into stark relief near the close of the most recent meeting of the city council.

Having filed for Chapter 9 bankruptcy protection in 2012, the municipal government in the county seat has been buffeted by financial, political, social, procedural and legal difficulties for some time. In 2017 the city made an exit from bankruptcy, having stiffed a long list of its creditors for $350 million during the previous five years, building up reserves of over $30 million and reframing its city charter to allow for greater efficiencies in administration and management in the process.

In addition to that reform and initial steps toward recovery, the city experienced a substantial political transformation as a consequence of the 2018 election in which then-Third Ward Councilman John Valdivia unseated the incumbent mayor, Carey Davis, and two newcomers, Ted Sanchez and Sandra Ibarra, were elected in the First and Second wards. Both Sanchez and Ibarra were aligned with Valdivia, joining with council member Henry Nickel and Bes-sine Richard to form a coalition that generally throughout Valdivia's first five months as mayor sided with Valdivia in regard to issues facing the city. Subsequently, in May, the vacancy created by Valdivia's resignation from his council post in the Third Ward was filled by a candidate he supported and who remains aligned with him, Juan Figueroa.

For $143,002 Raise, Almendarez Leaves CJUSD In The Lurch

Jerry Almendarez, who spent 13 years in the Colton Joint Unified School District as a student, the last nine years as its superintendent, and a decade prior to that as principal and administrator, on January 1, 2020 will depart from the institution where he has spent more than three-fifths of his life.

As the new year dawns, Almendarez will take the helm at the Santa Ana Unified School District

With the move, Almendarez will graduate from overseeing a district of roughly 24,000 students, which qualifies it as the 58th largest school district in California by enrollment and the fifth largest in San Bernardino County, to a district nearly twice the size of Colton Joint Unified. 4 Years After Bridge Revamping, Hesperia To Spend $16 Million For Full Replacement

The Hesperia City Council this week voted to spend up to $16 million to replace the existing bridge over the California Aqueduct at Rancho Road. That project will eradicate a $560,000 retrofit to that bridge that was carried out over an extended period of time four and five years ago.

The approval of the expenditure for the project has revived questions about the redundancy of public expense and inconvenience brought on by the failure of governmental entities to coordinate with one another.

Local officials suggested the waste of taxpayer money in this particular case is a manifestation of the disregard state officials sometimes show toward their governmental counterparts at the municipal and county levels.

In 2014, the California Department of Water Resources forced the City of Hesperia to put up $560,000 toward an earthquake retrofit project on the span over the aqueduct on Rancho Road. City officials sought to beg off, explaining that Hesperia had plans to widen Rancho Road in the near term, which would require the replacement of the bridge See P 6

For Second Time In 16 Months Montclair Fills Council Vacancy With Family Member

For the second time in 17 months, the city council in Montclair has elected to fill a vacancy within its ranks occasioned by the death or declining health of one of its members with a family member of the departed office holder.

Corysa Martinez will assume, at least until December 2020, the role her late mother, Trish Martinez, filled since her 2014 election to the city council. Trish Martinez died in September, just five months after her April cancer diagnosis and ten months after her November 2018 reelection.

The appointment process concluded this week is operative until there is a determination of official outcome for a special election corresponding to the November 3, 2020 General Presidential election to select an individual to serve the final two years on Trish Martinez's term in office. Trish Martinez was reelected in November 2018 to a four-year term ending in 2022. Corysa Martinez is to fill the gap on the council until after the November 2020 special election, one specified for a two-year term, is held. Corysa Martinez has implied that she will likely run in that election. Also to be contested in November 2020 will be the council positions currently held by councilwoman Carolyn Raft and Tenice Johnson. Those races will involve four-year terms.

This is the second year in a row that Montclair experienced an unanticipated vacancy on its council. In 2018, after an extended period of infirmity, then-Mayor Paul Eaton resigned and died shortly thereafter. In the aftermath of his departure, the council appointed his wife, Virginia "Ginger" Eaton, to replace him as mayor, a term which lasted five months, as the regularly scheduled mayor's race took place in November, in which longtime council members John Dutrey and Carolyn See P 7 fighters and office personnel. It is the primary firefighting and emergency medical service provider in 94 percent of the county's geographical confines, or about 19,000 of the county's 20,105 square miles. It serves more than 60 of the county's unincorporated communities, as well as the cities of Adelanto, Fontana, Grand Terrace, Hesperia, Needles, San Bernardino, Twentynine Palms, Upland and the Town of Yucca Valley.

Munsey's appointment concluded a nationwide recruiting effort that began shortly after Hartwig's departure and yielded a broad field of applicants.

"There were several outstanding candidates," McBride said, "but the board and I concluded that Assistant Chief Munsey offered the best combination of the traits we were seeking: the leadership skills and commitment to operate the county fire department effectively and professionally, and the ability and desire to work productively with public safety agencies throughout the county."

"Being chosen to serve as fire chief for this organization is a tremendous honor," Munsey said. "This is a team of highly skilled, dedicated professionals who serve a great community. I am excited about this opportunity to lead them and provide them with the tools and the environment they need to help County Fire fully achieve its great potential."

Munsey holds a master's degree in public administration with an emphasis on business and government and a bachelor's degree in business administration from Grand Canyon University. Munsey is the current president of the operations section of the California Fire Chiefs Association and president of the Hi-Desert Water District Board of Directors. He has been active for a decade in the Rotary Club of San Bernardino, Victorville, and Yucca Valley.

In 2013, Munsey graduated from the San Bernardino County Management & Leadership Academy, a program that provides comprehensive management and leadership training to county employees. Participants gain theoretical and practical knowledge of public service management and leadership practices, with specific emphasis on understanding their application within San Bernardino County government.

In addition to the standard provision of fire suppression, emergency medical services and ambulance services which are the province of traditional fire departments, the San Bernardino County Fire Department functions as a community-based, all-hazard emergency services organization involved in emergency mitigation and management for hazardous materials response, arson investigation, hazard and terrorism/weapons of mass destruction abatement, and technical rescue, including water-borne, flooding and mudslide, and winter rescue operations.

SB Mayor Installed City Manager With Understanding Her Quarter Million Dollar Salary Would Buy Her Acquiescence

Valdivia worked toward consolidating his newfound power with uneven success, making strides in certain respects but suffering setbacks in others. One challenge facing the city was the alarming rate at which the city was again engaged in deficit spending, burning through the reserves it had built up during the five year period it was functioning under the protection of the bankruptcy court such that it is on a trajectory to again be completely out of money by late 2020, with no ability to make up for the greater amount of money being utilized to run the city than income coming into the city from all of its revenue sources

Valdivia ultimately succeeded in ousting the city manager, Andrea Travis-Miller, who had been hired by the city under Davis. But Valdivia was unable to keep in place Bill Essayli, his chief of staff who had worked aggressively toward establishing Valdivia as the dominant political and administrative force in the city, as there were repeated clashes with Valdivia's two strongest opponents on the council, Fourth Ward Councilman Fred Shorett and Seventh Ward Councilman Jim Mulvihill, that persuaded Essayli to leave. Moreover, Valdivia, who at the beginning of the year was able to count on the solid backing of Sanchez, Ibarra, Fifth Ward Councilman Henry Nickel and Sixth Ward Councilwoman Bessine Richard, saw his hold on Ibarra and Nickel slip from time to time as issues emerged in which either personal differences between them and the mayor manifested or the interests of their constituents clashed with the overall direction Valdivia was seeking to move the city in.

In recent months, Valdivia's hold on the city has proven to be far more tenuous than he had hoped, as he and his new chief of staff, Matt Brown, are attempting to herd the council toward a consensus on a program consistent with the mayor's goals.

One of the provinces of San Bernardino municipal governance in which it at least appeared that Valdivia was in decent shape was that pertaining to the city manager he had installed following the removal of Travis-Miller, Teri Ledoux. Ledoux had previously worked in the capacities of an administrative analyst and assistant to the city manager in San Bernardino from 1995 until 2013. Travis-Miller in 2011 was brought in to San Bernardino to serve in the capacity of deputy city manager under then-city manager Charles McNeely. The city's worsening financial situation overwhelmed McNeely, who departed San Bernardino in 2012, leaving Travis-Miller in the capacity of acting city manager. With the city facing insolvency, it was Travis-Miller and the city's then-finance director, Jason Simpson, who fashioned the city's bankruptcy filing. In the trenches with Travis-Miller at that time was Ledoux, who was working in the capacity of assistant to the city manager. In 2013, both departed San Bernardino, Travis-Miller to become the executive director of the San Gabriel Valley Council of Governments and Ledoux to the City of Huntington Beach as assistant to the city manager there, Fred Wilson, who had previously been San Bernardino city manager.

In 2016, Travis-Miller was serving as city manager in Covina when she departed that Los Angeles County city to again take on the assignment of assistant city manager in San Bernardino. After the departure of then-San Bernardino City Manager Mark Scott in 2017, the Davis-led council hired Travis-Miller as city manager. Two months later, Travis-Miller tapped Ledoux, who by that point was employed with the City of La Verne as assistant to the city manager, to return to San Bernardino to serve as her assistant city manager.

In the late winter/early spring of this year, as Valdivia and Essayli began militating toward the removal of Travis-Miller as city manager, Ledoux made a show of loyalty to Travis-Miller, telling a cadre of the city's top staff members that if Travis-Miller were to be fired, everyone in unison should walk out of the city in support of her. During backroom discussions, however, Ledoux was offered the position of city manager. It was at that point, in April, when the equally divided city council split 3-to-3 on the question of putting Travis-Miller on administrative leave and Valdivia used his tie-breaking authority to suspend her, that Ledoux turned on her former friend. Without protest, Ledoux accepted the council's appointment of her as interim city manager. In May, after the election of Valdivia ally Juan Figueroa to fill the mayor's former position representing the Third Ward, sufficient votes were available to terminate Travis-Miller, and the council did so.

Valdivia's calculation at that point was that he could count upon Ledoux to carry out his agenda. Indeed, at the age of 61, Ledoux was intent on retiring upon logging 26 years as a municipal employee participating in the California Public Employees Retirement System when she reached the age of 63 in early 2021. By working for at least a year at the pay level provided to a city manager, she would see her pension substantially increased. Were she to serve out the remainder of her career as assistant city manager and retire in 2021, Ledoux would qualify for an annual pension of $123,500 based on her $190,000 per year assistant city manager's salary X 26 years X the pension-per-year multiplicand of 2.5 percent. By moving into the city manager's post entailing her highest one-year salary of $268,762.59, Ledoux would make herself eligible for an annual pension of $174,695.68, based upon her $268,762.59 per year city manager's salary X 26 years X the pension-per-year multiplicand of 2.5 percent.

Indeed, in July, the city council majority in Valdivia's camp conferred upon Ledoux a contract retroactive until June 1, 2019 and running through December 31, 2020 for her to serve in the capacity of city manager at a salary of $259,674 and benefits running to roughly $46,000 per year. On and the detective and officers confirmed that the 13-year-old does not have access to any firearms."

Nevertheless, an interview of the student confirmed that he was responsible for the Instagram message. He was taken into custody and booked at the High Desert Juvenile Detention Center on suspicion of making criminal threats.

The same day, school officials at Yucaipa High School were alerted to a threat of gun violence there.

"The entirety of the threat was a brief note written on a bathroom stall threatening to 'shoot up' the school tomorrow," according to a statement put out by the San Bernardino County Sheriff's Department that day. "A criminal investigation was launched and we have found no information to date to support that this threat is credible and do not know who wrote the message, or exactly when it was written."

The next day, Tuesday November 19, a separate instance of graffiti was spotted on a wall in a boy's restroom indicating someone was on the verge of carrying out the shooting at a specific time. In the same timeframe a student came forward to report that a 16-year-old student had armed himself. That student was not present at the school, it was determined. The school was placed on immediate lockdown, with deputies stationed around its perimeter. Detectives with the sheriff's department, which functions in the capacity of the Yucaipa Police Department pursuant to the department's contractual relationship with the city for the provision of law enforcement service, were dispatched to the home of the student identified as the one suspected of having made the threat. The deputies arrived at the student's home at approximately 1:10 p.m.

The student, a sophomore, was found to be at his home and in possession of a loaded .22 caliber handgun. After disarming him, the deputies arrested him and transported him to Juvenile Hall, where he is being held on a charge of being a juvenile in possession of a firearm.

As of Wednesday, sheriff's department investigators had not disclosed whether or not the student had previously brought the firearm on campus, and whether the threat to carry out the shooting was one he intended to make good on, and if so, what his motive was.

Almendarez Abandons Colton School District from front page

District registers as the eleventh-largest school district by population in California and the second largest school district in Orange County.

Almendarez started with Colton Joint Unified as a school principal in July 1999, after spending seven years elsewhere as a teacher. He served as the district's director of human resources from March 2004 until March 2007 and became the assistant superintendent of human resources in July 2008. He stayed in that assignment until October 2010, at which point he acceded to the superintendent's spot.

Almendarez has a master's degree in educational leadership and administration from the University of Redlands, and a bachelor's degree in business/finance from Cal State San Bernardino. He has taught as an adjunct professor at Azusa Pacific University and the University of Redlands. This spring he was named a 2019 Ted-Ed Innovative Educator.

Many believed that Almendarez was absolutely committed to the Colton Joint Unified School District, which operates all of the public schools in Colton, Grand Terrace and Bloomington and the Southridge neighborhood in southernmost Fontana. His own statements and those of his supporters on the school board indicated he was going to remain with Colton Joint Unified until his anticipated retirement, which was not to come for another 15 years. The lure of the money the Santa Ana Unified School District is going to pay him, however, overcame any feelings of loyalty he once felt for the students in the Colton Joint Unified School District. The Santa Ana Unified School District has an annual operating budget of $697.4 million. Colton Joint Unified had a budget of $257.88 million in Fiscal Year 2017-18.

By making the jump, Almendarez will see his total annual compensation leap from $291,998 to $435,000.

At present, Colton Joint Unified is paying him $239,241 in salary, another $1,500 in compensatory add-ons and $51,257 in benefits. The Santa Ana Unified School District will remunerate him with $327,000 in salary, other pay of roughly $33,000 and benefits of $75,000.

Almendarez quietly applied for the position in Santa Ana this summer shortly after the district's superintendent, Stefanie Phillips, announced her resignation on June 25. Almendarez understood that if his application was successful he would need to leave Colton Joint Unified in the lurch. That, in fact, occurred after a three-month long selection and interview process in which the Santa Ana Unified School Board received input from parents, staff, students and community members via an online survey, hearings and public discussions.

Colton Joint Unified was caught flat-footed by the Santa Ana Unified School District's decision to hire Almendarez, and it must now carry out its own recruitment effort.

The district, nonetheless, made no show of resentment toward Almendarez, providing an official statement that "We wish Superintendent Almendarez the very best and congratulate the Santa Ana school district on an excellent selection," while maintaining the district was focused on "continuing the outstanding work in our district to prepare all of our students for successful lives and to do that in the best, most effective ways possible."

August 1, 2019, she was given a 3.5 percent remuneration increase she was due, zooming her annual salary to $268,762.59.

With Ledoux on board as city manager, Valdivia and his team moved ahead with their agenda, which included Ledoux cooperating, over the roughly 17 months she was to remain in place, with an effort to reestablish the administrative authority the mayor possessed under the city's previous charter but which was removed with the city's voters' approval of a new charter in 2016.

Over the last several months, at least with regard to what has been taking place publicly, Ledoux appeared to be in lockstep with the Valdivia political machine. Well hidden, however, are the developments, machinations and intrigue within city offices carried out behind closed doors. Unbeknownst to the general public was the degree to which Ledoux was chaffing at Valdivia's overbearing manner and the way in which he has presumed that Ledoux will simply allow him to dictate the items to be considered for action by the city council.

An illustration of Valdivia's discomfiture with Ledoux's failure to accommodate his demands together with Ledoux's resentment of the mayor's reduction of her to his servant played out in the last ten minutes of the 5-hour-and-3 minute-long November 6 council meeting.

The council had come to the final item on the meeting agenda, consisting of the individual council members making suggestions as to what items should be referred to the council's various committees and which issues should be considered at upcoming council meetings.

Councilman Jim Mulvihill referenced his perception that the city should press forward with the refurbishing and reclamation of the Raddison Hotel, which has been vacant for over a decade. "We've got a couple of white elephants downtown," Mulvihill said. "I'm looking particularly at the hotel. The council has got to make a policy decision to have the city attorney start investigating all the contracts."

Mulvihill suggested that there might be a clause in the contract relating to the sale of the hotel, located on a campus between E Street and D Street that includes the San Bernardino Convention Center adjacent to the now-dormant San Bernardino City Hall, which the city could use to trigger the city assuming ownership or possession of the hotel. "Is there a callback policy, for example, regarding the hotel?" Mulvihill asked. "So, I'd like to ask the council to begin the movement to understand what's the basis for the hotel. The point is, we really need to begin the process of getting a use for the hotel, whether it becomes the city's property or whoever the owner happens to be, if they start operating. But right now, it's just a big white elephant, so I'd like the council to approve the beginning of the investigation of the contracts..."

Ledoux broke in at that point, saying "Actually, the mayor had brought this too my attention earlier this week and we were going to have a session in closed session next time. We have already done some research."

Ledoux's response to Mulvihill seemed to provoke the mayor, who noted that emails had been sent to her requesting action be taken with regard to the hotel property. "You have had the opportunity," Valdivia said. "I don't think there is a need for you to come to policy decisions on that. It's a matter of municipal code enforcement, building and safety inspections. Those are normal standard operating procedures that somebody on the north end or south end can employ."

Valdivia bristled at the way in which Ledoux had indicated readiness to meet Mulvihill's request, while implying that she had essentially ignored his own previous requests with regard to a reclamation of the hotel and convention center. "Now, when we have council members who actually opine and chime in, like my good friend Jim Mulvihill, now you take note. But it doesn't seem to get your attention when other council members have requested that you take action on safety inspections at Raddison."

Somewhat testily, Ledoux responded, "I told you I would put this on the next closed session, and that's what I intended to do."

Her response provoked Valdivia yet further.

"Well it seems convenient that now that we've got Councilman Mulvihill to make that recommendation that you are taking this seriously," the mayor said. "When council members ask you to put something on the agenda..."

"I take my direction at a duly notice meeting from a majority [of the council], period, Mayor," Ledoux intoned, interrupting Valdivia.

"Well, you and I can have that conversation, Miss Ledoux, but the bottom line is the conversation via email was a request," Valdivia asserted. "It was a request, within the provisions of the Brown Act, to create a safety action plan at Raddison Hotel."

The Brown Act is California's open public meeting law, which requires that the discussion of public issues by a governmental board must be advertised by means of an agenda some 72 hours ahead of city council meetings.

"I got that email this week," Ledoux shot back.

"This is an immediate eyesore in our community and council members are asking our city manager to get to work and do it," Valdivia said. "But for you to somehow obfuscate and push back on council members, I think that's really unacceptable."

Mulvihill emphasized at that point that he had gone to the city attorney to check on the legal clearance needed to proceed, seeming to suggest that Ledoux was merely being prudent in seeking legal clearance before taking any action with regard to the hotel.

Valdivia grew angrier still at Mulvihill's intercession on behalf of Ledoux, and he persisted in seeking to pick a very public fight with her, who rather than responding with further argument displayed what is instead her nervous tic of laughing, which she on past occasions has exhibited as a consequence of her anxiety or impatience over dealing in public with the demands or requests from the city council, in particular Ibarra.

"This is an eyesore," said Valdivia. "I'm not going to back down, Teri. This needs to be handled. Raddison Hotel is an eyesore. It's a public nuisance. You're laughing, but it's a public nuisance, And you need to do something about it."

When Valdivia made an additional demand that Ledoux provide at the upcoming December 4 city council meeting an item to increase the service rates for trash pickup paid by the city's residents to Burrtec Industries, the city's franchised trash hauler and one of Valdivia's major political backers, there ensued from Councilman Fred Shorett a remark that "The city manager takes direction from all of us, not the mayor" and a request from Ibarra that the mayor ask that Ledoux on the next regular city council meeting agenda "include all of the times we mentioned, not just yours."

When Ledoux began to ask for the council to provide specific direction on what she was to prepare for the next meeting, she was met with consternation from Valdivia, an indication that he felt the council had already been clear enough in its requests.

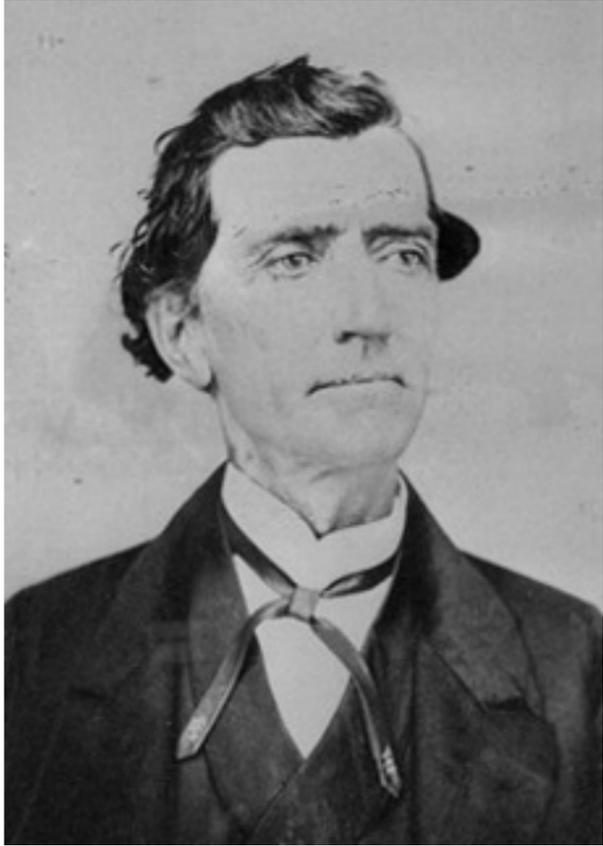

At that point, Deputy City Attorney Sonia Carvalho deemed it necessary to leap to Ledoux's defense, as it were, even at the risk of inviting the increasingly incensed Valdivia's wrath.

"What we have asked in the past is for respect and decorum and fairness to staff, and the way we get that is that the city council employs the city manager, and it's not easy for the city manager to balance all of the demands of the city," Carvalho said. "I think she's just asking for clear direction," Carvalho added, noting it was

Early San Bernardino County Lawlessness And Disorder

Allie Dennis Boren

By Mark Gutglueck

To the present day, San Bernardino County has been plagued with lawlessness, including that engaged in by officials in positions of authority and power, those ensconced in positions within the government who have abused and exploited the trust vested in them. It was no different in San Bernardino County's distant past, such that it could be reasonably said the county was built upon a foundation of disorder and misrule, a bedrock or criminality.

What might be called the first civil authority in San Bernardino consisted of the order imposed by the Mormon settlers who established the town in 1851. Among the community's initial public improvements was the San Bernardino's Council House, erected by the Mormon Colony's leaders, Amasa Lyman and Charles Rich, which served as San Bernardino's original seat of ecclesiastical and government operations, as well as the town's original courthouse.

In the winter of 1857-58, the Mormon leader Brigham Young summoned the Church's faithful to return to Salt Lake City, fearing that his entire sect was on the verge of war with the United States, which seemed intent on leveraging the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints and its adherents out of the Utah Territory. Thus, some two-thirds of those who had built San Bernardino simply up and left, leaving a population of more than 1,000 behind. The Mormon exodus created a vacuum in terms of organization and control, as well as the substance of certain civil institutions. A skeleton of a justice system survived, but it was inadequate to the task of imposing comprehensive order on much of the social chaos that was flourishing in the area at that time.

A factor in the overall situation was that the lawgivers of the era, the highest practitioners of the law - the judges themselves - were not particularly well-steeped in the law. Luther Ingersoll, in his Century Annals of San Bernardino County, 1769-1904, which was published in 1904, states, "The first county judge of San Bernardino County was Daniel M. Thomas, who was elected with the first officers of the county at a special election held under the act creating the county in June 1853. At the regular election in the following fall he was re-elected for the full term - four years. Judge Thomas was a man of fair education, but without any training as a lawyer. In 1857, he resigned to return to Salt Lake with his people and A. D. Boren was appointed to fill the vacancy, and later elected for the full term. He also, while a man of some education, had no special legal preparation. He was engaged in farming when elected. Through some mistake in the election proclamation for 1861, no mention was made of the county judge. M. H. Crafts was brought forward by his friends and received a considerable vote but he did not follow up the election with a contest and Judge Boren continued in office until he was regularly re-elected in 1862. He was again elected in 1866. He retired from office in January 1871, having held the judgeship fourteen years. He was succeeded by Henry Willis, who held the office for eight years, or until the new state constitution abolished the office of county judge."

Indeed, for nearly a decade-and-a-half shortly after the inception of San Bernardino County, the judge who reigned as the arbiter of all things legal was Allie Dennis Boren, who was a farmer, merchant, real estate agent, postmaster, and owner of a boarding house, but had never been a lawyer nor ever studied the law.

By 1856, there was considerable friction between the Mormon and non-Mormon population of San Bernardino, indeed to a degree that mayhem and death would have been a likely consequence, the actuality of which was averted, in great likelihood, by the departure of the lion's share of the Mormon population of San Bernardino back to Utah by early 1858.

The departure of the Mormons, however, did not quell the discord that boiled over into violence from time to time. The tome An Illustrated History of Southern California: Embracing the Counties of San Diego, San Bernardino, Los Angeles and Orange, and the Peninsula of Lower California, published by the Lewis Publishing Company in 1890, offers a glimpse of the way in which disorder ruled in the early days of San Bernardino and its eponymous county.

"In the fall of 1859 there took place in the town of San Bernardino a difficulty of local origin, that had somewhat the aspect of a civil war on a small scale," according to An Illustrated History of Southern California: Embracing the Counties of San Diego, San Bernardino, Los Angeles and Orange, and the Peninsula of Lower California. "There were in the place two rival physicians. Dr. Ainsworth and Dr. Thomas Gentry. They met one day at a livery stable, and Ainsworth returned fire on Gentry, who fled and sent word to his friends at El Monte that he was 'corralled by Mormons.' Impartial testimony on either side goes to show that the affair was purely personal and that no faction or party question was concerned. But Gentry's friends at El Monte rallied to his summons, and, led by a rough named Frank Green, they set forth, 100 strong, prepared to capture the town if necessary. On arriving at San Bernardino, and learning the circumstances as they actually existed, the more rational of the invaders, comprising about one-half of the party, returned home. But the rest remained, being in a frame of mind disposed toward disorder."

The account continues, "Ainsworth and his friends had intrenched themselves in an old adobe house on the corner west of the South Methodist Church. As night came on, with no indications of the approach of the hostile party, the to-be-besieged, who were well armed with rifles and revolvers, went forth and dispersed themselves over the cornfield surrounding the house. It was not until a late hour that Green's gang was seen approaching the house, upon which all the party of defense lay down, leveling their guns upon the enemy. The party from El Monte formed in line of battle on the opposite side of the road as quietly as possible, but they retreated in confusion and disorder on perceiving that they were under the eyes and the guns of the foe. As a body they were demoralized, but certain individuals remained and caused some disorder and bloodshed. Jim Greenwade, Frank Green and the Sea brothers were thus persistent, Green shooting David Coopwood in the thigh. The ruffian Green was bravely attacked in his turn by Taney Woodward, and the two men emptied their pistols at each other at short range."

According to An Illustrated History of Southern California: Embracing the Counties of San Diego, San Bernardino, Los Angeles and Orange, and the Peninsula of Lower California, "This fracas took place September 21, 1859. For days thereafter San Bernardino was a scene of lawless disorder. There were United States troops encamped on the banks of the Santa Ana River, three miles from town, but they did not interfere, probably because they were not called upon by the civil authorities. The sheriff was powerless to quell the mob, until at last he made a general call for all citizens to unite and drive out the intruders. This being done, peace and quiet, law and order, prevailed for a long time after. Green subsequently met a violent death at El Monte, slain by a man whose father he had killed."

The quality of the county's judges in its formative years was uneven, at best. As of 1890, according to An Illustrated History of Southern California: Embracing the Counties of San Diego, San Bernardino, Los Angeles and Orange, and the Peninsula of Lower California, "The present superior judges are: John L. Campbell and C. W. C. Rowell. Prior to their incumbency this office was variously filled; Hon. H. C. Rolfe, who grew up to the legal profession in San Bernardino, as an industrious and studious practitioner, held the office; so too, Henry M. Willis, who came, a young lawyer, from San Francisco in 1858, arrived at the position of county judge and superior judge. Hewitt Clark was a bright professional, but drink caused his decadence and death. Samuel G. Campbell, a lawyer from Missouri, was in the early days district attorney. He was an able man, but a dissipated one, and he died in a sad way. J. S. Sparks was par excellence the criminal lawyer at the bar of San Bernardino, able, eloquent, and almost always successful. Judge Benjamin Hayes, well known in Southern California history, was the first district judge, presiding over all the southern counties, including Santa Barbara. Judge A. D. Boren, born in Illinois, still a prominent citizen of San Bernardino, whither he came in 1854, was on the bench for fourteen years continuous. He was four times elected county judge, and presided dureasy for the city's elected leadership to make demands but more difficult for city staff to satisfy them. "It is just a point of clarification for her. What do you want her to bring back on the fourth [the December 4 council meeting]?"

After a general cacophony from the council dais during which Valdivia ignored efforts by Ibarra, Sanchez and Shorett to acknowledge previous requests that had been brought up, including Ibarra's previous call for the city to begin a recruitment effort for a replacement city clerk because of the scheduled expiration, under the city's new charter, of the city clerk's position as an elected post in March, Deputy City Attorney Carvalho again asserted herself into the proceedings, once more usurping Valdivia's role, insisting that a majority of the council sign off on putting items onto future agendas.

Shortly thereafter, Valdivia adjourned the meeting. As the council was taking its leave from the meeting hall, the Bing Wong Lecture Room at the Feldheim Library, the level of the mayor's dissatisfaction with the circumstance manifested once more in a sharp exchange he had with Shorett in which he leveled a threat to "take out" the councilman in March, in a seeming allusion to political action Valdivia intended to vector against Shorett in the March 2020 primary, despite Shorett not being up for reelection until 2022.

Whereas previously, there had appeared to be two camps among city officials – those supporting Valdivia and those siding with his council opposition consisting in the main of Shorett and Mulvihill with the occasional participation of Ibarra and Nickel in that dissent – the November 4 council meeting exposed a previously publicly unrecognized rift between Valdivia and Ledoux and the existence of a third camp, consisting of staff members galled at the presumption of the mayor and the recurrent overreaching of his authority in ordering staff to take action without the accompanying or prior approval of the city council.

Moreover, among city staff Ledoux has both supporters and detractors. Even staff members who are less than favorably disposed toward Ledoux, the Sentinel has learned, perceived Valdivia's public chastisement of the city manager on November 4 as both unnecessarily exaggerated and poor form.

While Valdivia did not say anything on November 6 that is too far out of character with pointedly critical comments he sometimes makes at meetings, it was noteworthy from the consideration that his invective was aimed at Ledoux, who was to have played a key role in carrying out his objectives over the coming year. The Sentinel was told by a city employee that "It is being portrayed by City Manager Ledoux and anti-Valdivia people that John's outburst was an outrage. Even though most of us are not Valdivia supporters, and we agree it wasn't the outrage it is being portrayed as, the mayor should not talk to anyone the way he did at the council meeting, and especially not in public. It was embarrassing and repulsive behavior."

Ledoux has been granted, city employees told the Sentinel, a front row seat to Valdivia's egocentricity and is now paying the price of admission to the city manager's office as well as doing an ironic penance for her betrayal of Travis-Miller.

"She figuratively stabbed the prior city manager, her friend Andrea, in the back by openly telling anyone who would listen that Andrea, not Valdivia, was the problem," a city insider said. "After blaming Andrea, she was able to get her 18-month contract, $270,000 pay, city phone and $700 per month car allowance. She has been heard mocking Andrea's lawsuit. Ask the council members. But now that she got a tiny taste of John's temper, and nothing like what went on between the mayor and Andrea, she is gathering sympathizers for herself. She can be heard complaining in City Hall about late meetings and weekend phone calls from council members. It was extremely disappointing to see her turn on Andrea. She bragged that she could get along with Valdivia, unlike Andrea. But, she is now learning the hard way that she made a deal with the devil with the mayor, [Councilman Juan] Figueroa, [Councilwoman Bessine] Richard and [Councilman Henry] Nickel, all for a retirement that is almost double what she would have received, for staying just 12 months in the city manager's role. It is hoped that she will be forced to answer questions about how Andrea was treated, now that she feels harassed. Prior to Andrea leaving, she told people that if Andrea gets fired everyone has to walk out to support Andrea, but then the promise of a lucrative contract changed that. This disturbing incident at the council meeting could make her see the light, and see how her coworkers view what she did to Andrea. If I were the mayor and his toadies, I'd be worried. If Teri is finally seeing the light, they will have challenges, and staff will support her. Now she is acting like Valdivia's victim, so we'll see how she squares this with her lack of support for Andrea."

Yet to play out is whether Ledoux will remain in place long enough to qualify for the $174,695.68 annual pension she has set her sights on rather than the $118,750 annual pension she is currently qualified to receive were she to be fired before the end of the year or the $123,500 annual pension she would receive if she is demoted to assistant city manager before reaching her one year anniversary as city manager in June of next year.

The Sentinel is informed that for political purposes Valdivia wants Ledoux to remain as city manager through March and the election in which his council allies Bessine Richard and Juan Figueroa, his on-again, off-again ally Henry Nickel and his political rival Jim Mulvihill must stand for reelection to remain in office. After that, however, Valdivia wants to replace Ledoux with a more experienced city manager, one with a far more extensive résumé than Ledoux possesses. If he can effectuate her firing between the election on March 3 and May 31, the city will avoid the higher level pension commitment to Ledoux, which will remain in place for the remainder of her life. Whether Valdivia's current level of animus against Ledoux will continue until March, and whether the council will support him in an effort to terminate Ledoux at that time is an open question. One assignment Ledoux was tasked with which she has yet to fulfill is to provide the council with a list of candidates for her replacement as city manager. There is a suspicion among some members of the council that Ledoux has been dragging her feet on compiling that list to prevent the council from making that replacement before June.

altogether. The Department of Water Resources nevertheless utilized its authority as part of an entity higher up the governmental evolutionary chain to consign the city into funding the upgrade.

The expense was not the only issue with regard to the seismic hardening, as the project inhibited traffic flow on Rancho Road while the project was ongoing.

Worse still, completion of the project was delayed, causing those traffic back-ups to last another three months, until March 2015.

When, before embarking on the project in 2014, city officials had asked local representatives of the Department of Water Resources whether their higher-ups in Sacramento were aware of the city's plans to widen Rancho Road, they encountered non-answers. Likewise, the state was unable to say at that time whether its own planners were aware of the incompatibility of the retrofit work with the city's plans to widen a nearly five-mile length of Rancho Road.

When the Hesperia City Council on November 19 voted 5-to-0 to adopt a mitigated negative declaration under the California Environmental Quality Act for the bridge replacement project, it was noted the existing bridge does not meet the Department of Water Resources current standards, entails a height inconsistency with the new road grade and cannot be widened. The existing bridge thus has to be demolished, obliterating in the process the retrofit work that had been undertaken in 2014 and 2015.

The Rancho Corridor Widening Project is to expand Rancho Road to six vehicle travel lanes and a shared pedestrian/bicycle pathway between the Rancho Road railroad underpass and Interstate 15, which is to include the increased width over the California Aqueduct Bridge. The eventual advent of the Tapestry Project will increase the already substantial flow of vehicle traffic on Rancho Road.

The bridge replacement will cost at least $14 million and perhaps as much as $16 million. While the cost of the Rancho Road Widening Project is to be defrayed, in large measure, by the developer of the massive 15,663-unit master-planned community Tapestry project, the $560,000 the city spent on the retrofit could have been husbanded and put to use on other more necessary and longer-lasting public projects, local officials have acknowledged. State officials have been more reticent, avoiding comment on the matter altogether.

ing the most lawless period of San Bernardino's history."

An Illustrated History of Southern California: Embracing the Counties of San Diego, San Bernardino, Los Angeles and Orange, and the Peninsula of Lower California further relates, "The position of San Bernardino as a frontier county, and the heterogeneous elements attracted by the mines, contributed greatly to local lawlessness and disorder. Not a few of the county offices having been captured by representatives of a desperado class attracted thither by the opportunity for crime and spoil, it became necessary to take protectionary measures; and therefore the best citizens united into a party pledged to support the law and maintain order. The county was almost bankrupted during the season of misrule, which lasted about four years. In those days, and indeed for about twelve years, no attention was paid to Whig, Democratic or Republican proclivities in politics, men being nominated for office by their friends, irrespective of party. As an instance of the little respect shown to the 'majesty of the law' by the community at large, the following episode might be related: A man belonging to one clan or clique, stabbed to death a member of another clan, near Holcomb Valley, and he was indicted and placed on trial at San Bernardino. Soon after the case opened fifteen men entered the courtroom, heavily armed, and without removing their hats, they seated themselves near the jury. Judge Boren recognized them as friends of the accused, and read their purpose in their demeanor, their hard, determined faces, and their resolution in having marched forty miles for the occasion. Not a word spoke the intruders, paying the closest attention to the proceedings. After a time, these somber visitors adjourn to a source of liquid refreshment, and the magistrate also adjourned court until the afternoon. During the recess, the authorities had time for deliberation, and the jury, understanding that conviction of the prisoner would entail an outbreak and bloodshed, decided to acquit him, and did so."

The narrative in An Illustrated History of Southern California: Embracing the Counties of San Diego, San Bernardino, Los Angeles and Orange, and the Peninsula of Lower California continues, "About this time it was that J. M. Greenwade, who held the combined offices of county clerk, recorder and auditor, became dissatisfied with the mode of procedure of the board of supervisors in the transaction of county business, drew his six-shooter and cleared the room of all those functionaries. Shortly after this, the same man, while intoxicated, met Judge Boren unarmed on the street, and, putting a pistol to the judge's breast with one hand, with the other struck the judge with a stick. Judge Boren retreated to where he could procure a gun, but was then restrained by the outsiders from shooting his county clerk, for which, as he has often expressed himself, he since feels profoundly content."

An Illustrated History of Southern California: Embracing the Counties of San Diego, San Bernardino, Los Angeles and Orange, and the Peninsula of Lower California gives examples of how the law was as often miscarried as followed in the courts in the late 1850s and well into the 1860s and even into the 1870s. For many, there was little in the way of justice or fairness in San Bernardino and its surrounding area.

"During this period, the functions of a county officer were often attended with considerable danger, unless the official were allied with or subservient to the gang of roughs in possession," according to An Illustrated History of Southern California: Embracing the Counties of San Diego, San Bernardino, Los Angeles and Orange, and the Peninsula of Lower California. "The era of good feeling and peace that had prevailed between the Mormons and their Los Angeles neighbors continued about until the exodus or return to Salt Lake in 1857-'58 of some three-fourths of the Mormon element. At this time there came to the county and the town a very undesirable class of citizens, and disorder and lawlessness became the rule, after these people organized to the extent of possessing themselves, partly by fraud and partly by force, of the offices of sheriff, county clerk, county recorder, etc. To illustrate these conditions, the following narratives will serve as types: One McFeely, who was, by the way, deputy clerk of San Bernardino, went one day to the house of an inoffensive old Negro, being intoxicated, and there made such threatening demonstrations that the old black man filed a complaint against him. McFeely was arrested, and taken before Justice J. W. Wilson. Taking the complaint into his hands, apparently for inspection, he rolled it into compact form, and then, pistol in hand, in the presence of the court, he forced the old darkey to eat the document! Judge Boren had this matter brought before the next grand jury, and an indictment was found against McFeely. At the trial the deputy sheriff packed the jury box largely with the friends of McFeely, to defend whom were retained all the lawyers in San Bernardino. Judge Russel, the district attorney, did his whole duty, but he was one against many. In the midst of the trial, the county clerk, coming drunk into the courtroom, heard the judge make a law-ruling unfavorable to McFeely, and, drawing his gun, he cried out to his deputy, 'Buzz Tarleton, don't you dare to set down any such ruling as that!' The associate judges in great alarm sprang away from

Until last year, Montclair had been among the most politically stable of San Bernardino County's 24 municipalities, with very little changeover on the council for two decades and only minor controversy with regard to governance issues in the same timeframe. Eaton's resignation, however, precipitated an uncommon degree of rivalry, albeit only with regard to relatively superficial issues, among the council's members. Dutrey and Raft, who had a cooperative and cordial relationship on the city council going back nearly two decades during Paul Eaton's tenure as mayor, were transformed into political rivals with the advent of the 2018 election season, which featured charges that Dutrey or his political team had engaged in misrepresentation and sign stealing.

After Dutrey's victory, differences emerged among the council members over how the vacancy created on the council brought on by Dutrey's resignation from his council post to accede to the position of mayor would be filled. On the distaff side, both Raft and Martinez wanted to appoint Ginger Eaton to assume Dutrey's former place on the council dais for the next two years. Dutrey and Councilman Bill Ruh favored holding a special election to decide the question. For Ruh, twice appointing Ginger Eaton to the council without her having run for the office, while there were multiple residents who had sought election previously, seemed inappropriate. Moreover, he asserted, the city's residents were entitled to choose the city's political leadership.

Raft and Martinez conversely argued that an election would represent an unnecessary city expense, and that Eaton had proven a good fit with the council.

Ultimately, early this year a compromise, of sorts, was worked out, with the council agreeing to make an appointment. Ultimately, a field of applicants that included several former city council candidates and others who had evinced an interest in civic involvement were interviewed by the council. Tenice Johnson, the city's planning commission chairman, was ultimately chosen.

The appointment of Corysa Martinez, 29, to fill in for her mother on the council was not subjected to contravention on terms relating to her qualifications. An attorney with her own practice in Upland, Martinez has long had an interest in politics and local government, as well as specific knowledge about issues before the city council as a consequence of her constant interaction with her mother.

There was nevertheless some degree of resistance to the concept of replacing Trish Martinez, as was the case with Paul Eaton, with a family member. More pointedly, Councilman Ruh said he felt the council should stand by the principle it had committed to when its members had agreed to make Johnson's appointment in declaring that further vacancies would be resolved with an election.

Considered along with Corysa Martinez were 11 others, including:

* Virginia Eaton, who in addition to formerly serving as appointed mayor, was the director of the Wignall Museum at Chaffey College and a board member of the Montclair Hospital Medical Center during her 54 years as a Montclair resident.

* David Schroeder, a five-plus year resident of the city and a facilities/operations manager and conservation specialist for the Chino Basin Water Conservation District.

* Rosa Rangel, a florist and a 31-year resident and member of the Community Activities Commission.

* Postal worker Anna Marie Salaiz, a 28-year resident.

* Financial consultant Donald Alexander, a 13-year resident.

* 2018 mayoral candidate Sousan Elias, an 8-year Montclair resident and proprietor of the Dragon's Tale Brewery and her own notary service.

* DSV Solutions inventory manager George RJ Tellez, who has coached Montclair Little League and Golden Girls Fast Pitch Softball teams, been a member of the Community Action Committee and has lived in Montclair for more than a quarter of a century.

* Los Angeles County Sheriff's Deputy Edgar Gallegos, a 4-year resident.

* Credit union employee Bruce Culp, a 6-year resident.

* Ontario-Montclair School District payroll manager Juliet Orozco, an 18-year city resident who has previously run for city council.

* Notary public Benjamin Lopez, a 42-year Montclair resident, who has twice run for city council, is politically active and whose father, Tony Lopez, is a board member with the Monte Vista Water District. Benjamin Lopez said he would again seek election to the council in 2020.

NOTICE OF PETITION TO ADMINISTER ESTATE OF:

Frances Ellen Smith

NO. PROPS1900886

To all heirs, beneficiaries, creditors, contingent creditors, and persons who may otherwise be interested in the will or estate, or both of Frances Ellen Smith

A PETITION FOR PROBATE has been filed by Gearine Weed, in the Superior Court of California, County of SAN BERNARDINO.

THE PETITION FOR PROBATE requests that Gearine Weed be appointed as personal representative to administer the estate of the decedent.

Public Notices

THE PETITION requests authority to administer the estate under the Independent Administration of Estates Act. (This authority will allow the personal representative to take many actions without obtaining court approval. Before taking certain very important actions, however, the personal representative will be required to give notice to interested persons unless they have waived notice or consented to the proposed action.) The independent administration authority will be granted unless an interested person files an objection to the petition and shows good cause why the court should not grant the authority.

A hearing on the petition will be held in Dept. No. S36 at 8:30 a.m. on December 2, 2019 at Superior Court of California, County of San Bernardino, 247 West Third Street, San Bernardino, CA 92415, San Bernardino District.

IF YOU OBJECT to the granting of the petition, you should appear at the hearing and state your objections or file written objections with the court before the hearing. Your appearance may be in person or by your attorney.

IF YOU ARE A CREDITOR or a contingent creditor of the decedent, you must file your claim with the court and mail a copy to the personal representative appointed by the court within the later of either (1) four months from the date of first issuance of letters to a general personal representative, as defined in section 58(b) of the California Probate Code, or (2) 60 days from the date of mailing or personal delivery to you of a notice under Section 9052 of the California Probate Code.

Other California statutes and legal authority may affect your rights as a creditor. You may want to consult with an attorney knowledgeable in California law.

YOU MAY EXAMINE the file kept by the court. If you are a person interested in the estate, you may file with the court a Request for Special Notice (form DE-154) of the filing of an inventory and appraisal of estate assets or of any petition or account as provided in Probate Code section 1250. A Request for Special Notice form is available from the court clerk.

San Bernardino County - Built On A Foundation Of Lawlessness

the side of the judge, lest a ball designed for him might go wide of the mark and strike them, and there was general confusion in the courtroom. The judge ordered court adjourned, and the clerk, finding comfortable quarters in a saloon, was not present at the afternoon session. The honest men on the jury were so impressed by this occurrence, and by the evident determination of the McFeely faction to release him at all hazards, that they actually agreed to a verdict of 'not guilty,' some of them telling Judge Boren later that he had perjured himself in his duty as a juror to prevent bloodshed and violence in court against the magistrate."

A grim footnote attends any account of James Monroe Greenwade, his life and his actions, which might shed further light on not only his personality but the character of a community in which he functioned as an authority. He would take his own life and that of his six-year-old daughter on New Years Day in 1869. He did not succeed in killing three others living in his household, including his wife and son.

The January 9, 1869 edition of the San Bernardino Guardian relates, "Died, at his residence on the 1st of January, 1869, James Greenwade and his little daughter Elizabeth, aged six years, from the effects of poison by strychnine. This drug was mixed in whisky and water, by Mr. Greenwade, with the intention, it is supposed to poison the whole family. After drinking some of it himself, he gave some to his little daughter, and requested her to give it to her mother, brother and Mr. Devers. The child on presenting it to her mother remarked that it was a 'bitter toddy.' This led Mrs. Greenwade to examine it, and found it to be strychnine, as she supposed. Oil and other medicines were given, but to no effect. The little girl died in about two hours after taking it, and the father lived but a short time longer."

An article from the Sacramento Daily Union dated January 28, 1869 states, "From all the facts bearing upon the case, it seems that Greenwade had been drinking to excess for the last two months, and impaired his brain to such an extent that he became insane and destroyed himself and child. He endeavored to poison his wife, his little son and a gentleman who was living in the family by the name of Dever. They refused to share the 'toddy' in which he had placed the poison and consequently but two instead of five died."

On May 13, 1857, Robert Carlisle, who had been born in Kentucky around 1830 and later made his way to Southern California in 1856, wedded Francesca Williams, the daughter of Colonel Isaac Williams. Carlisle was twenty-seven and his bride was sixteen. Colonel Williams was the owner of the Rancho Santa Ana Del Chino, a 22,193-acre portion of a Mexican land grant on what had been part of the San Gabriel Mission and what today is part of Chino and Chino Hills. Colonel Williams had fought on the American side during the 1846-1848 Mexican-American War and distinguished himself at the Battle of Chino. After California was annexed to the United States, Williams had been rewarded with the sum of $80,000 for his contribution to the war effort, a vast amount of money in those days. In 1856, Williams had died, leaving the bulk of his estate to his two daughters, Maria Merced and Francesca. Their mother was a daughter of Don Antonio Maria Lugo and sister of Jose Maria Lugo, Jose Del Carmen Lugo and Vicente Lugo, who, among them, owned the large San Bernardino Grant. Maria Merced married sheep farmer John Rains.

Following a year or so of residence in Los Angeles after their marriage, Robert and Francesca Carlisle returned to Santa Ana Rancho Del Chino. Robert Carlisle managed that holding with considerable efficiency, as he oversaw the work of about one hundred Indians who had comfortable adobe quarters near the main ranch adobe.

By virtue of his popularity and business acumen, Robert Carlisle in 1862 was elected supervisor for the First Supervisorial District in San Bernardino County. He assumed office on November 17, 1862, succeeding Richard Varley, and four days later, on November 21, 1862 he was selected by his colleagues to serve as chairman of the board.

He held the position of board chairman for the remainder of the time he was on the board. He served until November 1864.

It was on the very day that he took office, November 17, 1862, that his sister-in-law's husband, John Rains, disappeared.

John Rains had used the dowry he had received from the estate of Isaac Williams to purchase Rancho Cucamonga, a spread of ground that covers a substantial amount of present day Rancho Cucamonga. Rains built a fired brick home that is still extant on Vineyard Avenue just north of Foothill Boulevard. Rains built the Rancho into a successful business, entailing vineyards and a winery, as well as a stage station. Rains' abode became "the social center of the bright prospects were brightening, those of John Rains were taking a turn for the worse. Rains had overextended himself with some of his business ventures and to hold everything together, he borrowed against his rancho. On that fateful day, November 17, 1862, John Rains departed for Los Angeles – a town which then boasted a population of some 4,500 – and an overnight stay at the Bella Union Hotel that evening before finalizing some further financing arrangements, including the signing of some loan and collateral documents the next day. He departed for the town of the Angels in a wagon pulled by a team of his best horses.

Rains never arrived at his intended destination.

On November 19, 1862 the team of horses found its way back to the rancho. They were no longer hitched up to the wagon. Curiously, this did not trigger any immediate action. On November 21, the same day that Robert Carlisle attended his first board of supervisors meeting in San Bernardino as a member of that august panel and was named chairman of the board, a group of travelers arrived at the rancho, intending to see Rains. When they were told that he was missing and of the return of his unhitched wagon team, a search was initiated.

The two-day delay in starting the search was a remarkable one and has been problematic for historians. Rains commonly sojourned to Los Angeles, where he had a substantial investment and business to attend to.

On November 28, 1864 his body was found near Azusa, amid cacti some 400 feet off the road. There were obvious signs that violence had attended his last minutes of earthly existence. According to the Los Angeles Star, it appeared as if he had been lassoed and yanked from his wagon perch. His right arm was mangled from the elbow down and its upper portion had been pulled out of its shoulder socket. He was shot twice in the back, once in the side and on the left side of his chest.

It was a violent era in a violence-prone place. At that point, there had been 50 murders in and around Los Angeles over a period of about a year. Rains was known to have been assertive and to have something of a temper but did not seem to have any lasting enemies. It appeared he had been a victim of a random act of violence or larceny, perhaps by a highwayman on a remote span of the road to Los Angeles.

As Maria Merced's brother-in-law as well as a leading local official, Robert Carlisle led the effort to find Rains' killer and bring him to justice. Early on, his suspicion settled upon one of Rains' ranch hands, Ramon Carrillo. But Carrillo had an ironclad alibi, having been in Los Angeles and seen by multiple witnesses at the time Rains was thought to have met his grim end. Carlisle twice brought Carrillo before a court, but both times those charges were dismissed. Carlisle made accusations against a few others, using what even for that time were heavy-handed tactics to obtain two confessions, both of which fell apart under further examination by others. Ultimately, every case Carlisle sought to put together against those he said he suspected of having committed the murder failed to pan out. The only conviction growing out of Rains' death and its investigation was that obtained against Manuel Cerradel, one

Sheriff's Department Investigating Razor Attack On Female Deputy At WVDC

Sheriff's department higher-ups late last week and early this week were attempting to ascertain whether an outbreak of violence within one of the female inmate housing units at West Valley Detention Center on November 13 was an isolated spontaneous occurrence or whether it was part of a planned and concerted attack on jailers that presages a general uprising of prisoners chaffing under harsh conditions.

What appears to be certain is that a female deputy sheriff sustained injuries serious enough to require hospitalization after what was a planned and coordinated attack involving deception by at least two female inmates.

According to the Sheriff's Department, the deputy was violently attacked by two inmates on November 13 after she was induced to break strict security protocol and let her guard down in response to what seemed to be a medical emergency. In addition to the participation of two identified inmates, department investigators believe a third and perhaps a fourth rendered assistance in the assault.

At approximately 6:12 p.m. on Wednesday, November 13, while making routine rounds within the housing unit for female inmates, a deputy saw an inmate, Rose Marie Villalobos, 32, hovering over another inmate, 24-year-old Kyanna Renee Patterson, who was prone on the housing unit floor. Villalobos was feigning rendering assistance to Patterson, whose twitching and body contortions simulated an epileptic seizure.

As the deputy positioned herself to render Patterson assistance, Villalobos threw a cup of vomit into the deputy's face, punched her and slashed her face with a razor. Villalobos took the deputy's radio and used it to strike the deputy repeatedly in the head.

Patterson also used a cup to physically assault the deputy, according to the department.

Sheriff's department custody personnel monitoring video images streamed into a secure area located elsewhere in the West Valley Detention Center spotted signs that the attack was underway within 30 seconds of its onset, and several deputies flooded into the housing unit and restrained Patterson and Villalobos, bringing to a close the assault upon the deputy.

It appeared that at least one other inmate was acting as a watch-out to alert Villalobos and Patterson if any additional sheriff's department personnel were approaching.

The deputy who had been attacked was immediately transferred to a local hospital for treatment. She has been released, but at press time had not yet returned to work.

The department has initiated an investigation of the incident and its context, utilizing internal and external investigators, that is, ones already assigned to the West Valley Detention Center as well as detectives operating out of the sheriff's department headquarters who are assigned to the sheriff's command echelon or the department's intelligence unit.

Investigators have already made some headway, determining to a considerable degree what occurred.

Both Villalobos and Patterson have a history of violence. Villalobos has a history of violence while in custody.

Rose Marie Villalobos was serving time for an incident that occurred on April 3 of this year, which was originally charged as felony assault with a non-firearm deadly weapon in a way that was likely to cause great bodily injury on April 5. That charge was reduced to a misdemeanor in a plea arrangement entered before Judge Richard Peel on July 22. Villalobos, who has used the alias Rosemary Hernandez, had previously been arrested for battery that occurred on August 26, 2016. She was charged with a misdemeanor on that offense, which was then dismissed subject to a conditional plea arrangement. That dismissal was rescinded and the charge revived, however, after her arrest and conviction for the April 3, 2019 assault with a deadly weapon. In 2009, she was convicted of assault with a deadly weapon while in custody, a felony. On July 2, 2007, she was charged with attempted murder, infliction of great bodily injury and assault with a deadly weapon other than a firearm stemming from an incident on June 28 of that year. The attempted murder and great bodily injury charges were dismissed in return for her plea to assault with a deadly weapon other than a firearm in a manner likely to result in great bodily injury.

Patterson is in custody on a series of yet outstanding cases. One is based upon an incident that occurred in August 2018, in which she was charged with battery against a police officer. She pleaded not guilty to that charge before Judge Ingrid Uhler on August 16, 2018. That case remains active. She has another misdemeanor battery case stemming from an incident on September 29, 2018 pending against her. Additionally, based on her action on August 21, 2018, she is charged with attempted murder, kidnapping, evading a police officer with wanton disregard for the safety of others and hit and run driving resulting in injury or death, all of which are felonies and are yet pending.

Investigators believe that Villalobos and Patterson had the assistance of others, one of whom was inmate Amber Rae Tena. Tena, who also goes by the aliases Amber Word and Amber Rodriguez, was in custody on misdemeanor petty theft and assault charges when she was charged with assault by a prisoner and then both manufacturing a weapon while in custody and being in possession of that weapon. Tena participated in the November 13 assault by keeping watch and alerting Villalobos and Patterson when the deputy was approaching, investigators believe.

The investigation will touch on a number of issues, including the prisoners' access to items in the jail's commissary as well as cosmetics. Female prisoners in California are sometimes provided access to cosmetics, including makeup and eyeliner, because it is believed to reduce the incidence of violence in custody situations.

The investigation's data and report are to be forwarded to the sheriff's command as well as to the district attorney's office for review and a determination on whether charges are to be filed against Villalobos, Patterson and potentially Tena and others.

of Carrillo's compadres. When deputies who came to arrest him as a suspect in Rains' death at Carlisle's urging, Cerradel flew into a rage and attacked the deputies. He was exonerated of anything related to

Rains' death, but drew a ten-year sentence in San Quentin for his violence against the deputies. Before he could pay his debt to society, Cerradel was set upon by a band of vigilantes who apparently were convinced he did have something to do with Rains' demise. After Cerradel had been escorted to a ship in San Pedro Harbor that was to take him to San Quentin, a vigilante group boarded the steamer, overpowered the small party of attendant guards and hung Cerradel from the ship's mast. Cerradel was bound up, weighted down with bricks that were tied to his legs and then unceremoniously thrown into the harbor.

Cerradel's death may have sated some of the bloodlust that had been kindled in the citizenry of Southern California by Rains' murder, but less primitive minds knew that his murderer remained on the loose.

Indeed, not a few locals held abiding suspicions that Rains' murderer was none other than Robert Carlisle. In utilizing the classic criteria detectives apply in ferreting out the perpetrators of crime—motive, means and opportunity—Carlisle comes across as a prime suspect.

On November 17,

1862, the day Rains disappeared, Carlisle was scheduled to be on hand in San Bernardino for his swearing in as one of San Bernardino County's newly elected supervisors. He departed from Rancho Santa Ana Del Chino, ostensibly to keep his appointment at that honorific but never showed up. He was never able to adequately explain his whereabouts on that day.

During the weeklong search for the missing Rains toward the end of November 1862, Carlisle was in charge of the effort. Instead of staying in the wild along the road to Los Angeles to maintain a thorough scouring of the places Rains might have been, Carlisle returned to his home where one evening he held a festive party.

Humboldt's Lily

Humboldt's lily is a species of lily endemic to Baja and Alta California, where it is native to the San Bernardino Mountains, as well as the High Cascade Range, High Sierra Nevada, the south Outer South Coast Ranges, the Santa Monica Mountains and other spots in Southwestern California.

Within its habitat, it is one of the most visually striking of plants.

Known scientifically as the lilium humboldtii, it has two subspecies, ocellatum and humboldtii. Both flourish at elevations from approximately 2,000 feet to 3,900 feet. Subspecies humboldtii is found primarily in the foothills of the Sierras and central California; subspecies ocellatum is found primarily in southern California on the coastal side of the mountains and on the Channel Islands and in Baja California. Both subspecies are considered rare.

Its preferred habitat is chaparral and oak woodland near intermittent streams and in a spot providing dappled sunshine.

Classified by German horticulturist Max Leichtlin and named by him after the naturalist and explorer Baron Alexander von Humboldt, it has sometimes been misidentified. Albert Kellogg, unaware that the plant had already been named by Leichtlin, gave it the name lilium bloomerianum. Laymen quite often confuse it with the tiger lily, a different plant.

Growing on occasion to a height of 8 feet, with flowers that are large and showy, golden-orange with dark red or maroon splotches and orange to brown stamens, it sports leaves that grow in whorls, and are undulate, shiny, and oblance-shaped.

The plant flowers from May to July, with flowers growing in a pyramidal cluster, with approaching 50 flowers on a healthy plant. The flowers are on stout stems, which are sometimes brown-purple. The subrhizomatous bulb is large, with yellowish-white scales, and grows very deep in the soil. It is summer-deciduous, dying back after flowering in mid-to-late summer. Often, the flower will stand above eye level.

The flowers have 3 petals and 3 sepals, which look alike, curving upward and back. From the center of the flower hang six long stamens with orange-colored anthers.

late July or early August, with no water after blooming, as it prefers a dry summer dormancy and if possible good drainage and part shade. In winter it will do well with minimal supplemental water unless it is an especially dry winter.

Both subspecies are on the California Native Plant Society Inventory of Rare and Endangered Plants of California and described as "fairly endangered in California."

It was one of the parents, along with lilium pardalinum, that produced the Bellingham hybrid lilies, the most popular offshoots of which are the 'Shuksan' and 'Star of Oregon' lilies.

The plant is resistant to fire eradication in that it will germinate from seed on charred ground.

Historic San Bernardino County Lawlessness

Then there was the matter of his comportment toward his sister-in-law after her husband's death. Carlisle hectored, bamboozled and bullied Maria Merced into granting him power of attorney over the Rains estate.

Added to the obvious misdirection toward ultimately false suspects during the murder investigation that followed the discovery of Rains' body, Carlisle's behavior is at best extremely curious.

In time, the theory that Rains had been killed because of his secessionist sympathies and affiliations took hold. Carlisle, in looking after his sister-in-law's affairs, became deeply involved in the settlement of John Rains' estate. This led to a bitter dispute with the King Brothers of El Monte and Los Angeles, with whom Rains had business dealings, including shared ownership of the Bella Union Hotel.

On November 21, 1864, Carlisle was replaced on the board of supervisors by Henry Suverkrup. By that point, Carlisle's land holdings had grown from the 22,193 acres of Rancho Santa Ana Del Chino to some 46,000 acres, which included much of the land he had managed to swindle from Maria Merced Rains.

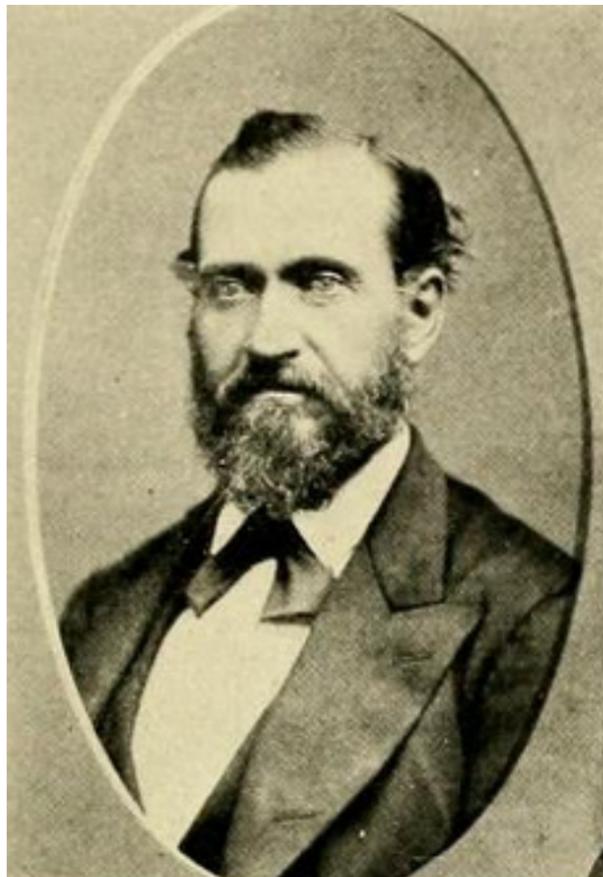

On July 5, 1865, more than seven months after he had left the board of supervisors, Carlisle had come to Los Angeles to attend the wedding of merchant Solomon Lazard and his bride, Caroline Newmark, the daughter of Joseph Newmark, who established the Los Angeles Hebrew Benevolent Society and the city's first Jewish cemetery. The wedding party was held at the Bella Union Hotel. In attendance at the party was Los Angeles County Undersheriff Andrew King, one of the King Brothers. Though Andrew King was at that time a Los Angeles County official, he previously had been San Bernardino County's constable. In addition to the bad blood between Carlisle and the King Brothers over Rains' business holdings with them and their interference in his management of his sister-in-law's estate, Carlisle had accused Andrew King of indolence in the investigation of Rains' murder. That night in the crowded saloon on the ground floor of the hotel, there was a heated exchange between the two men, and Carlisle, who perhaps was drunk, slashed the lawman across his right hand and opened up a gash on his chest with a Bowie knife. Friends separated the two men, but Carlisle threatened, according to later testimony, to kill "any and all" of the King Brothers.

Carlisle did not have the good sense to leave Los Angeles after this contretemps, and instead spent the night at the Bella Union. The next day, two of the King Brothers, Houston and Frank, came into the hotel to confront Carlisle.

A gunfight ensued. Carlisle was fatally wounded, but not before he had himself shot and killed

In a different age, Jackson might have found himself disbarred. Even more colorful than Jackson was Sparks, described as "a tall good-looking man with a brilliant mind and a gift to gab."

According to contemporaneous accounts, Sparks "seemed to have the world by the tail" but at one point "allowed his life to be governed by unruly emotions and an occasional bout with the bottle."

Sparks had been a newspaperman in New York City, converted to Mormonism, and sailed to San Francisco with his wife Mary and son on the ship Brooklyn.

In June 1853, Sparks was present in San Bernardino County and practicing law, two months after the county's formation. Not too much later, Sparks was excommunicated by the church when a church elder publicly accused him of drunkenness and abuse of his family. After her husband's expulsion, Mary Sparks moved to Salt Lake City where she remarried and died in 1898.

In retaliation, Sparks joined an anti-Mormon political party crusading against church-imposed regulations. Whereas formerly he had been one of the church's most passionate advocates, he grew into one of its most severe and vociferous critics. He stood with John Brown after he was evicted from his Yucaipa ranch. In March 1857, when an effort to expel Jerome Benson from Benson's ranch near what today is Hunts Lane and Redlands Boulevard was initiated, Benson fought back, with Sparks' assistance. The eviction of Benson ultimately failed.

According to Ingersoll, "The first person who made any pretense of establishing in this county the business of a lawyer was A.M. Jackson who came here from San Francisco in 1854. By courtesy he was called 'Colonel' Jackson. but like the campaign names given to some of Col. Roosevelt's Rough Riders, the title must have been given to him under the rule of contrariness – for he had never had the slightest military experience nor was he in any way combative. He had previously had some experience as a court clerk and probably had been a notary public. In opening his career as a lawyer in San Bernardino, he posted up notices, written – as there was no printing press here then – to the effect that he would draw up and prepare in proper and legal form, deeds, mortgages, notes or any kind of agreements or other legal documents, or attend to any kind of legal business for a reasonable consideration. His law library consisted of a book of forms and business directions called 'The New Clerk's Assistant.'

By it's aid and some tact in the use of antiquated legal phrases he made quite a reputation among the citizens of San Bernardino for legal ability. He was quite an adept in effecting compromises and settling differences out of court. He did a lively business for a time in divorcing people who came to him with their domestic troubles. He would write for them an agreement of separation in the usual form and endorse on it. 'Article of Separation and Bill of Divorce' and have the parties sign and acknowledge it with much formality, under the belief that they were regularly divorced with all the due and binding force of law. Several parties whom he had thus 'divorced,' married again. And some of them found themselves in trouble when the legality of the new marriages was questioned. For many years he carried on his law business without going much into court. On one occasion he appeared for a young fellow by the name of Tom Morgan, to defend him on a charge of assault and battery in the justice's court. After the defense was in, the Colonel weakened on the case and began to address the jury by admitting, tacitly at least, that his client had violated the law but that he was an industrious young man and had had some provocation and on account of the hard times ought to be let off easy. When Tom himself caught the drift of the remarks, he interrupted and proceeded to make a speech to the jury himself, claiming that he had acted in self defense. The jury took the same view of the case and acquitted him."

According to Ingersoll, "Q. S. Sparks, who was one of the Brannan party which arrived in San Francisco in 1847, came to San Bernardino in 1853. He brought with him several thousand dollars but he met with financial troubles and was soon 'broke.' Of gentle manners and a ready flow of language, he gained quite a reputation for oratory and occasionally appeared in court for clients, although not then admitted to the bar as an attorney. At the time of the exodus of the Mormons and the filling of their places by other population, Sparks had a very good standing as a practitioner, especially in the defense of criminal cases. About 1858 he was admitted to the bar of the district court. He had only a very ordinary common school education and no learning as a lawyer, nor was he naturally studious; yet with his tact and his natural gift of oratory, he for several years stood among the leaders in the bar of the county. He was also in high repute as a speaker on public occasions and acquitted himself in such addresses with much ability."

Ingersoll's narrative regarding Sparks continues, "As illustrative of his traits. an anecdote of one of the last cases in which he appeared in this county is told. His client was charged with grand larceny in stealing a horse. His associate counsel in the case tried to have a consultation with him in order to agree upon a line of defense and prepare some instructions for the jury. But Sparks could not be got down to such business. His associate finally asked him what he expected to rely upon, to which he answered: 'I rely on God Almighty, Q. S. Sparks and the jury.' He probably knew that the law and the facts were against his client but by tact and his address, he so worked upon the jury as to secure an acquittal, notwithstanding that the accused was seen stealing the horse from the pasture at night and was caught riding the horse the next day."
