Judge Ratifies $2,000+ Per Acre-Foot Water Replenishment Fees In The West Mojave

By Mark Gutglueck

Orange County Superior Court Judge William Claster on June 14 upheld the Indian Wells Valley Groundwater Authority on its imposition of water drafting assessments in excess of $2,000 per acre-foot against one of the major agricultural entities in the West Mojave Desert.

For nearly a decade, there has been an intensifying dispute over the use of water in Indian Wells

Valley, which lies at the northwestern extreme end of the Moiave Desert and the confluence of the northwestern corner of San Bernardino County, the eastern end of Kern County and the southwestern extension of Inyo County. The effort by the Indian Wells Valley Groundwater Authority, a joint powers entity formed to end the overdrafting of water from the region's water table, resulted in the derivation of a strategy to simultaneously limit water use while building a 51-mile pipeline to convey water from the California Aqueduct to the valley and then convey billions of gallons of water from the northern part of the state into the local aquifer. That undertaking promises to be so expensive, however, that the water users subject to the Indian Wells Valley Groundwater Authority plan, which maintain their previously established water rights and/or usage patterns under longexistent California water law render them exempt from any newly-created water use restrictions, have balked at paying the fees imposed on their water use to pay for the construction of the pipeline and to purchase the water from the California Aqueduct.

Litigation over the Groundwater ity's imposition of water use fees has ensued between the largest private entities subject to those fees, those being Searles Valley Minerals in San Bernardino County and Mojave Pistachios and Sierra Shadows Ranch, along with John Thomas Conaway and the Nugent Family Trust, located in Kern County. That litigation has been removed to Orange County Superior Court to See P 2 lature is contemplating passage of a bill similar in virtually all respects to one vetoed last year by Governor Gavin Newsom which would allow striking workers to claim unemployment benefits.

The proposed legislation, Senate Bill 1116 by Democrat State Senator Henry Portantino, would give striking workers the ability to claim unemployment after two weeks of striking. Under the bill, striking claimants would be paid, like any temporarily unemployed worker in the state, from their particular former employer's reserve account in the unemployment insurance fund.

In describing Senate Bill 1116, Portantino, whose 25th Senate District includes Upland in San Bernardino County, said, "Senate Bill 1116Will allow striking or locked out workers to be eligible to receive UI benefits for the duration of the dispute after the dispute has lasted more than two weeks."

Senate Bill 1116 is a slight redraft of Senate Bill 799, introduced by Portantino last year and which was passed by the legislature. Senate Bill 799 was to restore unemployment insurance eligibility for striking workers who left work because of a trade dispute after those workers were voluntarily off their job for two weeks. The bill codified speci-

A group of Democrats from the Assembly, State Senate and Governor Gavin Newsom's office are negotiating and engaging in horsetrading with regard to our next budget in private. There are no Republicans nor media allowed in the room where all of this is taking place.

In years where a budget has been formulated well before the start of the government's July 1 to June 30 fiscal year, representatives from the state legislature, including lawmakers from both major parties, hash out the state's annual spending plan during committee meetings and in private conferences in what logically fits the definition of a bipartisan give and take, though the party in the minority has historically given more and the party in the majority has taken more.

In those years when the July 1 deadline is approaching or has elapsed and a budget agreement has not been closed, the legislature passes what is referred to as a placeholder state budget, which is usually a clone of the previous year's budget that allows the government continue to run. A placeholder budget is also a means of getting around the requirement in California that lawmakers not be paid if they fail to pass a budget by the annual deadline.

Given the Democrats' supermajority in both houses of the state legislature, now that Sacramento has entered into the province of final budget negotiations, all political nicities have ing bare-knuckle tactics, senior Democrats have employed the State Capitol's police to bar the door to the negotiating room and only Democrats have been allowed

Dorsey Became Undersheriff Despite His Dissent Over Intelligence Function Abuse

Raymond Dorsey, who initiated his law enforcement career with San Bernardino County Sheriff's Department at the relatively advanced age of 26, ultimately rising to the department's highest ranking non-elected position, has died, 27 years after his retirement.

The son of Lester Dorsey and Mary Colette Dorsey nee Maloney, born in Los Angeles on January 19, 1941, Raymond Francis Dorsey came to Redlands with his family when he was three years old, remaining a resident there for the remainder of his life.

In growing up, led by his oldest brother Richard, who was 11 years his senior, Ray and his brothers Ron and Tom took advantage of the rustic and agricultural character of the Redlands community and its proximity to the San Bernardino Mountains and the San Gorgonio Wilderness, by hiking, camping, fishing and hunting incessantly.

He attended and graduated from Redlands High School, San Bernardino Valley College and Redlands University, where he lettered in Football at all three. In High School and while he was attending Valley College, he worked at Gene Hinkle's Union 76 gas station in downtown Redlands. With his brothers, he went to work for the tile business owned by their father.

In 1965, he married

In 1967, he joined the sheriff's department as a deputy. He was well thought of by then-Sheriff Frank Bland, who had a second home in Redlands and was on familiar terms with Dorsey's father. Dorsey promoted rapidly in the department. It is believed he was the last member of the department to serve in the capacity of inspector, a rank which was subsequently done away with.

By 1980, Dorsey was ensconced See P 5

To Balance H<sub>2</sub>O Use & Recharge In Indian Wells Valley, The Plan Is To Build A Pipeline To Import Water From The California Aqueduct from front page prevent any of the entities from having an undue influence over the adjudicative process, as might be the case in Kern County or San Bernardino County superior courts, where the governmental entities that are the constituent members of the Indian Wells Valley Groundwater Authority or Searles Valley Minerals are dominant players in their respective communities.

Last week, Judge Claster dealt what many believe is a death blow to Mojave Pistachios, which will prevent it from drafting any further water without paying $30 million in backfees and fees of more than $2,100 per acre-foot of water drawn from the aquifer going forward, ending that company's effective protest against the Indian Wells Valley Groundwater Authority and its plan by putting the company out of business or driving it into bankruptcy following the investment of what is estimated to be $35,316,400 in its Indian Wells Valley farm since its 2011 inception.

In 2014, then-California Governor Jerry Brown signed into law the Sustainable Groundwater Management Act, mandating water-saving measures throughout the state and requiring local agencies to draft plans to bring groundwater aquifers into balanced levels of pumping and recharge through the adoption of a groundwater sustainability plan.

In 2015, in the aftermath of a four-year running drought, a determination by the California Department of Water Resources that Indian Wells Valley overlies one of the 21 water basins throughout the State of California in critical overdraft and with the implementation of the requirements of the Sustainable Groundwater Management Act pending, the Indian Wells Valley Groundwater Authority was formed, pursuant to a joint exercise of powers agreement involving Kern County, San Bernardino County, Inyo County, the City of Ridgecrest and the Indian Wells Valley Water District as general members and the United States Navy and the United States Department of the Interior Bureau of Land Management as associate members. Given that it is the entity most heavily steeped in waterrelated issues and that it employed a staff highly knowledgeable with regard to water operations, not to mention its control over the lion's share of facilities pertaining to local water storage, conveyance and management, the Indian Wells Valley Water District from the outset essentially served as the staff for the Indian Wells Valley Groundwater Authority.

Based upon a survey of water usage patterns undertaken by an engineering consultant, Carlsbad-based Stetson Engineers, the authority and the Indian Wells Valley Water District sought to derive a strategy for both reducing water use in the valley and increasing groundwater recharge to reach a balance of both that will end the overdraft.

Achieving that balance has taken on an urgency based upon a California State mandate, growing out of the Sustainable Groundwater Management Act, that depletions of the valley's groundwater cease by 2040.

According to the surveys completed to provide the data needed to formulate the Indian Wells Valley Groundwater Sustainability Plan, the average natural annual recharge in the basin is 7,650 acre-feet while the annual drafting of groundwater in the region by all entities is three to four times that amount.

An acre-foot is the amount of water that would cover an acre to a depth of one-foot, or

43,560 cubic feet, equal to 325,851.4 gallons

Any realistic assessment of the existing industrial. population, agricultural and commercial operations in the area and the decreases in the drafting of water from the regional aquifer that could be achieved through efficientization, conservation, increased recycling of water and perhaps the minimization of evaporation demonstrated that it would not be possible to achieve use/recharge balance by 2040.

Accordingly, staff and the board of the Indian Wells Valley Groundwater Authority long ago concluded that the sought-after goal bringing the region's water table out of a state of overdraft can only be achieved by the importation of water from outside the valley and then injecting it deep into the ground to avoid evaporation and replenish water lost from excessive production.

The groundwater sustainability plan for Indian Wells Valley that was formulated by Stetson Engineers and staff with the Indian Wells Valley Groundwater Authority that was on track toward eventual implementation called for obtaining water from the California State Water Project on an annual or continuous basis to make up the difference between the amount of water being used in the valley and the amount of annual rainfall that recharges the valley's aquifer.

In order to tap into the state's aqueduct, officials said, the authority will need to construct 50.8 miles of pipe from California City to Ridgecrest, consisting of 40.6 miles of 24-inch pipe and 10.2 miles of 18-inch pipe, of which 22.8 miles will consist of steel pipe, 27.5 miles of PVC [polyvinyl chloride] pipe and a half-mile of HDPE [high density poly-ethylene] pipe for trenchless drainage crossings; three pump stations; one 240,000-gallon regulating tank at peak elevation in the El Paso Mountains along Highway 395; and a million-gallon terminus tank at the Indian Wells Valley Water District Ridgecrest Heights Tank Facility.

In order to execute on the project, the governing board and staff of the Indian Wells Valley Groundwater Authority this summer began an effort toward determining how much of a financial burden the landowners and water users within its jurisdiction will need to assume in covering the cost of completing a water pipeline project to replenish the region's dwindling water supply.

The preliminary cost estimate for completing the groundwater sustainability plan as projected in January 2020 was $177,975,000, including a 20 percent contingency add-on. The original cost estimate was adjusted downward to $165,740,000, including a 20 percent contingency add-on, when an alignment study for the project was completed in April 2023. Just four months later, however, in August 2023, the cost estimate had jumped to $200,536,000, including a 20 percent contingency add-on.

Those estimates, however, did not include land acquisition, permanent easements, temporary construction easements, and fee property, construction administration, permitting fees or credits on existing conservation easements for sensitive species mitigation.

Of tremendous moment for the authority is the means availability to pay for the project. Under the Groundwater Sustainability Act and related federal laws and regulations, the authority can qualify for five potential options federal funding of construction activities associated with the interconnection pipeline project, which are administered through four separate agencies.

Under the Water Resources Development Act, the project qualifies for two programs, one being as a water resources project and the other an environmental infrastructure project, both administered by the Army Corps of Engineers. The Indian Wells Valley Groundwater Authority's share of the cost of project completion if it were to be done as a water resources project would be $15 million. If it were to be done as an environmental infrastructure project, the authority's share of the project completion cost would be $53 million.

Under the National Defense Authorization Act, the project could qualify for federal funding in an arrangement by which the administrative agency would be the Department of Defense, and ownership, operations and maintenance of the project would reside with the United States Navy.

Under the Water Infrastructure Improvements for the Nation Act, the project could conceivably qualify for federal funding to be administered by the Department of the Interior.

Under the US Environmental Protection Agency's loan program, the project could qualify for federal funding assistance which would ultimately be administered through a private finance institution on behalf of the Environmental Protection Agency.

It is unclear what percentage of the project cost could be defrayed under the National Defense Authorization or the Water Infrastructure Improvements for the Nation acts. It does not appear that the funding amounts from either would approach that provided by the Water Resources Development Act, however. The US Environmental Protection Agency's loan program could conceivably cover up to 80 percent of the currently estimated $200,536,000 cost, such that the authority would need to defray roughly $40 million. That program is subject to a number of unknowns, however, including how much of the loans might ultimately be forgiven and how many might need to be paid back in

Consequently, the Indian Wells Valley Groundwater Authority Board of Directors is most heavily focused on the two programs available under the Water Resources Development Act. The program to be completed as a water resources project, ultimately at a cost of $15 million to the Indian Wells Valley Water District, would take as long as 11 years to complete. The program undertaken as an environmental infrastructure project, costing the Indian Wells Valley Groundwater Authority $53 million, would be completed within a much shorter timeframe, one of roughly five years.

Board members are naturally sensitive to the $38 million difference in cost to be borne by the authority. As it stands, the authority is gravitating toward some order of taxing regime to finance the pipeline construction.

Relevant is whether the authority will opt for a tax-as-it-goes ap-Continued on Page 5 School Funding a student who had perfect attendance, that is, being present all 180 days. Most students do not achieve perfect attendance. On average, students across the board in California miss an average of just under 11 days per year. Thus, schools in California average $12,142.65 yearly for the students they educate.

The more times a student is absent, the less money flows to the school and district where he or she attends.

Prior to the COVID pandemic, attendance within Morongo Unified was less than stellar, at 94.4 percent. That was slightly lower than the state average, but no worse than a fair number of other districts, and better than some.

The pandemic threw school districts throughout the state for a loop, as the remote learning approach was suddenly in vogue and some districts coped more readily than others in not only adapting to the new methodology but in being able to engage all or a majority of its students in participating in a virtual learning environment. Similarly, some districts did better than others in monitoring and documenting students' on-line attendance. In some cases, it was extremely difficult if not impossible to determine if a student was indeed participating in remote collective learning encounters. The bugs needed to be ironed out in the new process and the California Department of Education allowed districts a certain leeway in how they made students check-in to the electronic classroom. To assist school districts from unfairly losing funding, the state allowed districts to utilize a three-year average of student attendance to qualify for the new form of cyberbased funding.

With the move to return to traditional classroom settings for many districts in the first semester of Academic Year 2021-22, the return to traditional classroom settings for most districts/schools in the second semester of Academic Year 2021-22 and the complete retransition to traditional classroom settings for all California school districts in 2022-23, the state has dispensed with rolling averages, which districts were using to artificially increase their average daily attendance and, thus, the money they were taking in.

proach, whereby tax revenue brought in each year, presumably as an additional assessment on property owners' property tax bills or water rate increases, would go directly toward paying for ongoing work on the project. Conceivably, given an 11-year timetable for the program to be completed as a water resources project, taxpayers or ratepayers within the jurisdiction of the authority could provide the roughly $1,363,636 annual local share of cost for building the pipeline. If, however, the authority seeks to have the project completed as an environmental infrastructure project, the authority's annual share of cost over the five years it would take to complete the project would run to $10.6 million per year. That would create a taxing regime likely to be too onerous for the Indian Wells Valley's taxpayers to bear, such that the authority would need to go to a bond-issuing arrangement, one which would spread the payments out over as many as 40 years, but which would involve having taxpayers for as many as four decades take on the added burden of paying back not just the principal of the loan but interest.

Unclear is whether the financing would involve property taxation or an increase, probably a very steep one, on water rates for the more than 11,000 Indian Wells Valley Water District customers, the roughly 1,000 ratepayers in San Bernardino County and some 300 to 400 water users in Inyo County.

There has already been resistance to fees that the authority sought to impose on major water users in the Valley.

An early strategy which the authority and Stetson Engineers, as the designated the water resources manager for Indian Wells Valley, sought to impose to both reduce water use in the valley and increase groundwater recharge involved carrying out a survey of water usage patterns in the region and then assigning water use allowances to the region's well owners. Excess use fees, referred to as augmentation fees, were formulated for application to those well owners who were pumping above their allowances as well as on any farmer whose use exceeded his respective share of the water supply set aside for agricultural usage. The excess use fee on any water beyond what was allocated to each user was set at $2,130-per-acre-foot. That fee was worked into the region's groundwater sustainability plan and was submitted by the groundwater authority to the state, which approved it in 2022.

The concept was that money to be generated in that way is to be used to purchase imported water and pay for the eventual provision of infrastructure needed to bring in the imported water. This was accompanied by a farmland fallowing proposal, where selected farms were to have their active operations reduced.

Even before the California Department of Water Resources had fully examined the proposed groundwater sustainability plan for the Indian Wells Valley, a number of farms and operations in the region raised protests over the limitations being imposed on them. Among those were Searles Valley Minerals, Meadowbrook Dairy, Mojave Pistachios and Sierra Shadows Ranch, along with John Thomas Conaway and the Nugent Family Trust and Mead. Ultimately, Searles Valley Minerals, Moiave Pistachios and Sierra Shadows Ranch, along with John Thomas Conaway and the Nugent Family Trust sued the groundwater authority and the Indian Wells Valley Water District as the lead agency in that joint authority, claiming the conservation efforts being undertaken imposed not only an unacceptable financial burden on them but were abrogating their water use rights altogether.

Some entities tried to come to terms with the Indian Wells Valley Groundwater Authority. Others did not, sticking to their guns, while claiming they had established a water use pattern that was inviolate. One of those was Mojave Pistachios, which did not pay the excess use fee.

On June 14, Judge Claster granted the Indian Wells Valley Groundwater Authority's request for an injunction against Mojave Pistachios LLC and required that the company pay $30 million in backfees on all of the water it had pumped in the Indian Wells Valley without allocation.

Pistachio farming is a water intensive use. It appears that in the two years since the state ratified the $2,130-per-acrefoot fee for any non-allocated pumping, Mojave Pistachios was utilizing about 4.40141 acre-feet of water per acre per year on its 1,600-acre farm and 215,000 pistachio trees or roughly 7,042.25 acre-feet per year.

Mojave Pistachio's legal team had proceeded under the theory that the company could withhold payment on the nonallocated pumping fees while the matter was being litigated. The Indian Wells Valley Groundwater Authority, conversely, held that all of the users of non-allocated water within its jurisdiction had to front the fee even if it was taking legal action, as per California's "pay now, sue later" policy with regard to water regulations. If the groundwater plan it was seeking to impose proved unconstitutional or in any way unlawful, the fee would be refunded, the groundwater authority maintained. Mojave Pistachios persisted with its legal theory, even after it was rebuked by an appellate court with regard to an earlier Orange County Superior Court ruling. The California Supreme Court rejected Mojave Pistachios' request that it review that ruling. With his June 14 ruling, Judge Claster has unequivocally settled the matter in favor of the Indian Wells Valley Groundwater Authority.

Judge Claster's ruling extends only to Mojave Pistachios, as it is the primary and major dissenter with regard to the imposition of the non-allocated water use/excessive water fee. Searles Valley Minerals in San Bernardino County engages in solution mining, involving soaking portions of the company's dry Searles Lake in ing no earlier than 1955. and the China Lake Naval Air Station, which is not subject to the restrictions in the groundwater management plan nor subject to water use fees of any type imposed by the Indian Wells Valley Groundwater Authority. Because of Searles Valley Minerals' long extant water use patterns and its water rights, which were claimed, granted and verified and reverified at multiple junctures in the past, the San Bernardino County company, which is owned by the Indian corporation Nirma, was not subject to as steep of non-allocated pumping/excess use fees as was Mojave Pistachios, which did not begin its water use until 2011 and the water rights for which have never been adjudicated.

It was Mojave Pistachio's lack of historic

Trona with water to precipitate brine which is then extracted and processed to produce boric acid, sodium carbonate, sodium sulfate, several specialty forms of borax, and salt. It has acceded to paying the fees on the water it uses beyond the free-use allotment the Indian Wells Valley Groundwater Authority has assigned it. In addition, Searles Valley Minerals wells are the source of water used for domestic purposes among Trona's residents, the number of which have been dwindling from 1,400 at the time of the July 2019 earthquake that devastated that community. Searles Valley Mineral's corporate predecessors stretch back to the late 1890s and its water rights are senior to any in the region, having been established more than 90 years ago. This gives Searles Valley Minerals precedence over any other entities claiming water rights in the area, including the Indian Wells Valley Water District, which began its pumpthe Indian Wells Valley Groundwater Authority to claim and the Orange County Superior Court to determine in January 2023 that Mojave Pistachios should be allocated no Indian Wells Valley Groundwater Basin water, such that Mojave Pistachios had to pay $2,130 per acre-foot for all water it used.

ter it used. Judge Claster's ruling came despite amicus curiae briefs in support of Mojave Pistachios filed by the California Building Industry Association, Searles Valley Minerals Inc., the Howard Jarvis Taxpayers Association, the Western Growers Association, the California Farm Bureau Federation. American Pistachio Growers, the California Association of Winegrape Growers, the Agricultural Council of California, the California Fresh Fruit Association and California Citrus Mutual.

Efforts by the Sentinel to reach Rod Stiefvater, the owner of Mojave Pistachios, were unsuccessful.

On June 12, in a public statement, Mojave Pistachios said that if the injunction were granted, what would ensue would be "the death of 1,600 acres of trees" and the need to "shutter a locally owned, private farming operation. No farmer, including Mojave Pistachios, could ever pay this irrigation fee. Turning off the pumps will mean the loss of decades of productive life of tens of thousands of trees."

According to that statement, prepared by the public relations firm of Stutzman Public Affairs, there remains a "question of whether the Indian Wells Valley Groundwater Authority is depriving Mojave Pistachios of its water rights."

According Stutzman Public Affairs, Mojave Pistachios' attorney, Scott Slater, has advanced legal arguments that a court order to turn off the farm's water pumps forcing Mojave Pistachios to cease maintaining its orchards is unnecessary because no one is being harmed by the company's current water use, with negligible changes in water levels at the ranch.

"As the Indian Wells Valley Groundwater Authority argues their views on the limit on available water, it has become evident that the modeling used for their groundwater sustainability plan is not an accurate assessment of the basin's sustainability," according to Stutzman Public Affairs. "A new analysis by a technical working group of experienced hydrologists demonstrates there is more fresh groundwater in storage than Lake Mead and the sustainable annual recharge is conservatively 56 percent higher than what the Indian Wells Valley Groundwater Authority estimated and based its replenishment fee upon. With millions of acrefeet of freshwater available for recovery, the plan to spend hundreds of millions of dollars to build a pipeline through sensitive desert habitat is unnecessary."

then remained in place throughout Academic Year 2020-21 resulted in students and parents coming to accept nonattendance and intermittent attendance. In many households with two working parents or in single parent households in which that parent was employed, parental monitoring of a student's remote experience learning was virtually nonexistent. In those households where a parent was around, some students would simulate participating in the electronic classroom but would actually engage themselves in some other cybernetic activity.

A minority of these have developed a disaffinity for school and education altogether. Some malinger whenever they can to avoid going to school.

In Morongo Unified, the 94.4 percent attendance of 2018-19 and the first semester of 2019-20 would later comes across as dedicated scholarship. Average daily attendance since that time has slipped to 89.9 percent.

According to a report to the Morongo Unified School District Board of Trustees by Director of Fiscal Services Faith Segovia, in the just ended 2023-24 academic year, the district's 7,361 students achieved a daily attendance of 7,199 students. That was an impressive 97.8 percent attendance. That netted the district $103.5 million in payments for student attendance. But what it reflected was many high school seniors and juniors who have been slacking for some time getting serious about what they had to do to grad-

Based upon an analysis of who the diligent students are and who are the slackers, 2024-25 looks to be a rough year financially for the district. With an anticipated total enrollment of 7,321 beginning in August, if past attendance patterns hold true, Morongo Unified will likely experience an average daily attendance of 6,767, meaning its funding from the state will drop to $98.7 million, an anticipated loss of $4.7 million, according to Segovia.

For that reason, the district may make some emergency expenditures in hiring one or two or three very aggressive truant officers.

to create economic pressure and negotiate. That is not the same as having no idea where your next paycheck comes from. SB 1116 is a profound departure from unemployment insurance's history, and a significant tax increase on California's employers, including those who have no involvement in any labor disputes. Moreover, with a recession potentially in our future, SB 1116 risks compounding unemployment insurance's insolvency-which will weigh heavily on the State, California's employers, and California's truly unemployed."

At present, California does not have sufficient money to pay for unemployment benefits now being doled out to the state's unemployed workers. To maintain its unemployment insurance system and continue to provide checks to the unemployed, the state has taken out nearly $20 billion in federal loans, which need to be paid back with interest.

California's unemployment insurance fund is provided entirely by employers. In this way, the debt the system is taking on will ultimately be borne by California employers. In essence, Senate Bill 1116 would require that employers subsidize the strikes their own workers are engaged in, an activity diametrically against their own interest. Moreover, SB 1116 will effectively put employers with businesses against which no labor action is taking place to subsidize strikes against other companies, some of which may be their competitors, because the unemployment insurance fund's debt adds taxes for all employers uniformly.

Unemployment insurance payments are intended to assist employees who through circumsances beyond their control have become separated from employment. Federal law sets out the basic requirements for individuals to qualify, including being "ready and willing to immediately accept work" and "totally or partially unemployed," and "actively looking for work."

The California Unemployment Insurance Fund is already enmeshed in historic debt, which at present runs to roughly $20 billion, a circumstance that was exacerbated by the CO-VID-19 pandemic and shutdown mandates. Consequently, California employers already are paying increased unemployment insurance taxes based upon both state and federal pursuant requirements. Projections are those increases will continue under the current conditions and actuarials at least until 2032.

California is already plagued by a growing interest payment to simply remain in a static position with regard to its unemployment insurance fund within the State of California's general fund. In 2023-2024, that interest payment has reached $300 and that payment will continue to escalate until the unemployment insurance fund returns to solvency. In the proposed 2024–2025 budget, the interest payment will rise to a projected $331 million. SB 1116 risks compounding the unemployment insurance fund's insolvency.

Upon the fund becoming insolvent, employers have faced these escalating unemployment insurance taxes to the point of their current exorbitance, ones which in anything approaching a full-blown recession would force the majority of companies out of business.

ing news he lacked the requisite intent for the crimes he is accused of committing."

The letter, while advocating on Gohill's behalf, does acknowledge that he willingly placed himself within a context of activity authorities deemed illegal.

"The Israel-Hamas war and related protest movement is one of the biggest news stories of our time, especially on college campuses," the letter states. "Gohill's specific beat at The Daily is student activism. Given this dedicated area of coverage, you can understand how this would lead to an emerging journalist's desire to closely follow protester activities, especially activities likely to prompt a law enforcement response. Based on the circumstances and absence of any criminal motivation, we urge your office to avoid expending significant resources prosecuting a young journalist who was acting in good faith to serve the public's interest in timely coverage of newsworthy events."

Gohill, initially after his arrest was, like the other 12 Stanford students, suspended from the university. Upon examining the circumstance, President Richard Saller and Stanford Provost Jenny Martinez revoked Gohill's suspension. He remains a member of the Stanford Class of 2027.

Rosen and his office have not made any public reaction to the letter.

within the department's command echelon and was briefly considered to be a candidate to succeed Bland as sheriff, but was deemed, at that time, to be too young and not experienced enough. Rather, it was intended that he would be groomed to become sheriff by remaining as a deputy chief and eventually acceding to asundersheriff rank under Floyd Jones, a one-time California Highway Patrol captain who left that agency to go to work in the sheriff's department. Dorsey was on track to take on a senior assignment under Jones when he became sheriff, as Jones was Bland's penultimate choice to succeed him. When Jones suffered health issues, a heart condition specifically, he opted out of running for sheriff. In-

In the 1982 election for sheriff, Dorsey, rather quietly, supported Charles "Chuck" Callahan, another sheriff's captain who had the temerity to run against Tidwell. Tidwell, who had Bland's endorsement and the support of the political machine which had grown up around Bland since his maiden 1954 victory in the sheriff's race followed by his sistant sheriff and then stead, Floyd Tidwell was string of reelections in ering network within the community in which 1974 and 1978, won that race handily.

> Despite Dorsey having backed the wrong political horse in the 1982 race for sheriff, he remained on decent terms with Tidwell, who valued his intelligence and depth of experience in multiple roles within the department.

Under Bland, the sheriff's department had developed a rather formidable intelligence gatha railroad police officer from Needles who hired on with the Needles Police Department and eventually rose to become Needles police chief, attended at one point the FBI Academy, attending lectures given by J. Edgar Hoover. Hoover had trained his acolytes, Bland would later say, that police agencies should maintain a dossier on all prominent members of cards within the department's alphabetized file Department indexes. personnel – from deputies making field reports of everyday contact with victims, witnesses, arrestees, suspects and bystanders to detectives as well as sergeants, lieutenants, inspectors and captains working cases – were instructed to make note of any details that might prove to be of some use to the department either with regard to ongoing or future investigations or in providing the sheriff and his department leverage in dealing with politicians, officials, decisionmakers, prosecutors, lawyers, judges or the like.

While initially, the red cards were intermixed with the cards kept in the card catalog file drawers kept by the department which were accessible by all of the department's clerical staff, eventually the red cards were removed from the general file and placed into a separate one accessible only to certain designated members of the department.

The main arm of the department's intelligence gathering function had been the department's intelligence unit, which worked in tandem with the crew of investigators attached to the department's command echelon, i.e., the undersheriff, the assistant sheriffs and the department's deputy chiefs.

At one point in his career, Dorsey had advanced by making himself an indispensable element of the investigative unit attached to the command echelon. Later, when he moved into a position within the command echelon himself, he possessed an institutional memory of the operations its investigators and the parallel intelligence unit had undertaken going back years.

The department, in its internal parlance, was divided into Germans and Irishmen. Germans followed orders handed down from the rank above them, goosestepping without question. Irishmen, again in the department's nal parlance, complied with orders in their own fashion, dancing a jig around them. Dorsey was an Irishmen rather than a German. While throughout the first half of his career, Dorsey had done all that Bland had asked of him, from his personal point of view, he felt the accumulation of highly personal data about the communities prominent citizens was not a justifiable law enforcement function. Under Tidwell, the intelligence unit was gathering information department higher-ups thought might demonstrate that then-Supervisor Larry Walker was a homosexual; cataloging then-Supervisor/later State Senator Ruben Ayala being escorted by the department's helicopter to cathouses in San Diego; documenting then-Supervisor Robert Hammock's extramarital affairs; photographing judges Joseph Johnson, John Wade and Joseph Katz in what were or might be construed to be compromising situations, accumulating evidence of marijuana use by supervisors Jerry Eaves and Jon Mikels, monitoring the gambling activity by Supervisor/ Public Defender David McKenna, tracking the business dealings of Supervisor Robert Townsend and obtaining information, documentation or evidence about other potentially illegal or embarrassing activity by other public figures.

While Dorsey made his views known, he did not actively defy any specific orders from above and he did not seek to block the continuing use of the department's intelligence unit or the investigators attached to the command echelon to engage in activities he himself did not deem to be a legitimate use of law enforcement resources. Neither Tidwell, nor Tidwell's Dick Williams, nor Williams' successor, Gary Penrod was willing to remove Dorsey from his posts of authority within department, partially out of concern that if that were to be done, he would unload everything he knew about the department's questionable operations to sympathetic outlets in the press.

To the extent that the outside world knows about the intelligence gathering efforts by the San Bernardino County Sheriff's Department, Dorsey can be given at least partial credit.

In 1990, when Tidwell decided not to seek reelection, Dorsey again quietly supported Callahan in what would be his second unsuccessful run for sheriff.

Williams remained in office only a single term. In 1994, Penrod, who had been a Tidwell protégé, inherited the Bland political machine and ran successfully for sheriff. Under Penrod, Dorsey served as undersheriff. In 1997, having served with the sheriff's department for 28 years and 8 months, Dorsey retired.

His son with Thea, Stephen Dorsey, served with the sheriff's department, rising to the rank of deputy chief.

He died on May 28, 2024 at Redlands Community Hospital and is survived by his wife Thea, son Steve, daughter-in-law Tracy, sister Shirley Carper, and brothers Ron and Tom.
