12 Incumbents Out In This Year's San Bernardino County Municipal Elections

By Mark Gutglueck

Tuesday's election resulted in unprecedented political upheaval in no fever than nine municipalities in twelve different city council and/or mayoral races across San Bernardino County, with four of the county's six longest serving elected city officials being turned out of office. In total, three mayors once thought unassailable and eight council members have been or appear to have been handed their walking papers by voters.

In the City of Adelanto, which has an established reputation for unconventional politics and intensive contention among its elected leadership, Councilwoman Stevonna Evans appears to have unseated two term Mayor Gilbert Reyes.

Both Evans and Reyes were among the three then-political neophytes swept into office in Adelanto in 2018 in the aftermath of the implosion that featured as star players former Mayor Rich Kerr and one-time Councilman Jermaine Wright, both of whom ended up in federal prison when their manipulation of city codes and regulations in exchange for bribes put up by a cross section of the entrepreneurs seeking to establish commercial cannabis and marijuana-related business operations in the 52.9-square mile city grew brazenly obvious. While Reyes, Evans and Gerardo Hernandez were elected mayor and to the city council, respectively, largely on the perception that they were reform candidates, the council they were a part of did not rescind the previous actions by Kerr, Wright and another council member, John Woodard, intended to transform Adelanto, which for approaching a See P 2

Wapner Slips Into Second Behind Mike Rios In Ontario's Third District Race

As of 6 p.m. this evening, with the tallying of the votes from Tuesday's election ongoing, Mike Rios has pulled ahead of embattled Alan Wapner in the Ontario City Council District Three contest.

Wapner, who has served continuously on the Ontario City Council for 27 years and eleven months after first getting elected in 1994, was victorious in his 1998, 2002, 2006, 2010, 2014, 2018 and 2022 re-electoral efforts.

Last year, he had declared his intention to run for Ontario mayor, and collected $912,529.08 in donations between January 1, 2025 and June 30, 2026 to finance that campaign, in which he was to run against incumbent Mayor Paul Leon. Along the way, he had picked up the endorsements of Teamsters Local 1932 representing 380 Ontario city employees, American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees Local 3061, representing 1,260 Ontario city employees, the Ontario Police Officers Association, representing the city's police officer up to the rank of sergeant, the Ontario Police Management Group, representing Ontario's police department's lieutenant and See P 3

2024 Fatal Shooting Of Gardening Hoe-Bearing Autistic Teen By Deputies Was Justified, DA's Office Determines

As was widely anticipated, the San Bernardino County District Attorney's Office has exonerated Deputy Brandon Clancy in the fatal March 9, 2024 shooting of 15-year-old Ryan Gainer in the front yard of his family's home.

Deputies had been dispatched to the Gainer residence that day to a single family residence located at 13494 Iroquois Road at approximately 4:48 p.m. after Gainer's stepmother and Gainer's cousin in emergency 9-1-1 calls reported to the sheriff's dispatch center that Gainer was actively assaulting another member of the Gainer family, a sister, was acting aggressively toward other family members, had broken a window and was damaging property at the residence and had a shard of broken glass with which he was seeking to perhaps harm himself. His stepmother had asked that the sheriff's deputies respond to the Gainer home and take Ryan into custody and conduct a psychiatric evaluation. Gainer's cousin told a dispatcher that he had taken refuge in a closet because Ryan Gainer had just assaulted three people and broke the front door with a shovel and tha Ryan was in the front room with his father, Norman Gainer.

State Schools Superintendent And Both Chino Valley & Redlands School Board Race Outcomes Knell The End Of California's Traditionalist Education Reform Movement

It appears that the Christian traditionalist reform movement that had taken root with two of San Bernardino County's seven largest school districts has been stifled by this year's election.

The defeat of school board candidates in the Chino Valley and Redlands school districts who were standard bearers of the conservative movement has arrested, at least temporarily, a wave that some of those who support the reimposition of the conservative social and moral values that predominated within the California public school system during much of the 20th Century which were championed by San Bernardino County's own Max Rafferty were hopeful would spread to three or four of the county's 23 other school districts.

The California Teachers Association, the bargaining unit for the vast majority of California's Kindergarten-through-12th grade teachers, is widely recognized for having a liberal to progressive political orientation and a close strategic alignment with the Democratic Party. That union's support of successful candidates for California Superintendent of Public Education has resulted in, or dovetailed with, the generally liberal orientation of the vast majority of those employed with the state's educational system.

LA County Gang Leaders Outfox Fontana PD

A team of Fontana police officers ventured somewhat afield of their normal bailiwick and found themselves way out of their depth and outmaneuvered by the gang capos they had come to arrest.

Most of the officers were out of uniform and in plainclothes as part of what was a hybrid undercover operation/raid, although some members of the team who were supposed to come in for back-up as the program progressed were at the far periphery of the scene were outfitted with tactical gear and flak vests with the logo "Police" emblazoned on their backs.

Those at the top of the criminal organization the police officers from San Bernardino County had crossed into neighboring Los Angeles County to take down, consisting of individuals associated with the Florencia 13, Cudahy S/S C13, Cudahy Familia, Walnut Street and Diablos gangs, immediately recognized what was in the offing when they were alerted to the presence of a number of obviously armed individuals who were not native to the area by their own street assets, those being individuals on the ground in the northern Cudahy district.

Utilizing a protocol that had been worked out in advance for use during such circumstances, multiple calls or text messages were placed or relayed to the Panic Button, Alert Button, ICEBlock, People Over Papers and ResistMap apps, report- See P 4

RC City Hall Architect And Jacqueline Kennedy Were An Item Between JFK's Death & The Former First Lady's Marriage To Aristotle Onassis

The architect who designed Rancho Cucamonga City Hall and Jacqueline Kennedy Onassis had it off in the time between President John Kennedy's assassination and the former First Lady's 1968 marriage to Aristotle Onassis, according to John Paul Warnecke's recently published posthumous memoir.

When Rancho Cucamonga's municipal officials in 1988 fully committed to constructing a City Hall from scratch rather than having its administration and various departments operate out of a business park on Baseline Road as had been the case over the previous 11 years since the city's 1977 incorporation, it turned to architect John Carl "Jack" Warnecke.

decade had been teetering on the edge of bankruptcy and disincorporation, into the first city in California with an openly cannabis-based economy. Rather, Reyes, Evans, Hernandez and council members Joy Jeannette, Daniel Ramos, Amanda Uptergrove and Angelo Meza ultimately embraced the sale of medical marijuana, marijuana and marijuana-containing products intended to be used for their intoxicative effect and cannabis-based products along with the cultivation of marijuana as acceptable businesses and industries in the city, although with the recognition that they were not intended to be the city's central economic activity. Indeed, Evans was for a time linked to a cannabis-business principal with whom she was engaged in a personal relationship and Reyes grew into a leading proponent of expanding the scope of cannabis/marijuana-related operations within the city limit as a basis of further economic development. Early on, there was cooperation and an emerging alliance between Reyes and Evans, as Reyes designated her the city's mayor pro tem and conferred on her prestigious governmental adjunct appointments to regional and joint powers authority boards. That political honeymoon drew to a close however, a mere eight months after both were installed in office when Reyes, asserting that he had lost faith in Evans because he considered her to be untrustworthy and perceived that she was militating against him politically, deposed her as mayor pro tem and elevated Hernandez to the vice-mayor's spot.

Three years later, in 2022, Evans forewent seeking reelection to the city council and instead challenged Reyes in the mayoral contest. He handily defeated her, garnering 48.32 percent of the vote in a five-person race. While Evans was the second place finisher, she gathered 17.21 percent, as Reyes claimed 2.8 votes for every vote she received, while the three other candidates in the race accounted for 34.48 percent of the vote.

Two years later, in 2024, Evans ran once more for city council, doing so successfully.

This year, she took on Reyes again. Also competing in the race was perennial Adelanto mayoral candidate Ronald Beard, who finished fourth in 2022 with 11.37 percent, in fourth in with 15.47 percent in 2018 and in fourth place in 2014 with 20.45 percent. This year, Evans made up the ground that separated her from Reyes in 2022 and then some. As of today at 6 p.m., she polled 2,186 votes or 46.99 percent to Reyes' or 40.18 percent. Beard made up the difference between them with 597 votes or 12.83 percent.

Jayshawn Johnson, who ran fourth among ten candidates for the Adelanto City Council in 2020 and is currently an appointed planning commissioner in the city, ran for city council again this year. As of 6 p.m. today, in which he is the sole interloper in a three-way race also featuring incumbent council members Angelo Meza and Amanda Uptergrove, he is in second place, with 2,027 votes or 33.84 percent, behind Meza, who has 2,084 votes or 34.79 percent and ahead of Uptergrove, with 1,878 votes or 31.35 percent.

In Colton, Mayor Frank Navarro is nearing the end of his second term as mayor. He was first elected to that post in 2018, six years after he was first elected to the city council. Prior to that, Navarro had been a founder and among the most active participants in Citizens for Colton First, a grassroots political reform and fiscal watchdog group.

John Echevarria was first elected to the Colton City Council in 2020, representing what was then District 5. With the conversion of the city from six districts to five, he is now representing District 4. He is employed as a lieutenant with the San Bernardino Police Department. He opted to run for mayor this year rather than seek reelection to the city council. As of 6 p.m. today, he is leading Navarro in the head-to-head contest, with 5,007 of the 9,402 votes cast or 53.25 percent to 4,395 votes or 46.75 percent

John Roberts, who was first elected to the Fontana City Council for a two-year term in 1992 and re-elected to four-year terms in 1994, 1998, 2002, 2006, 2010, 2014, 2018 and 2022, is the longest continuously serving council member in San Bernardino County. He is the second-longest serving council member/mayor in the county in terms of years, surpassed only by Chino Mayor Eunice Ulloa, who served as a councilwoman and mayor from 1984 to 2004 and re-initiated her tenure as a council member and mayor in 2006, serving continuously since then.

In 2010, Roberts, a retired firefighter and fire marshal, was reelected to the city council for the fifth time, the same year his council colleague, Acquanetta Warren was elected mayor. Very shortly thereafter, Roberts, a Republican, signed on as a member of Warren's ruling council coalition. Warren, a Republican, has defied the odds in Fontana, where the party affiliation of its voters consists of 45.7 percent of its registered voters are Democrats, 23.6 percent of its registered voters have no party affiliation whatsoever, 23.1 percent of its voters are Republicans and the remaining 7.6 percent are members of the American Independent, Green, Libertarian, Peace & Freedom or other more obscure political parties. Warren held her coalition together by relying heavily on donations from Republican Party supporters as well as principals in businesses seeking approval of projects they were proposing within Fontana City Limits or attempting to land city contracts for goods and services. This approach, which entailed a heavily pro-development approach to governance and what many have consistently characterized as a "pay-to-play" environment, has long had its detractors. Those critical of Warren and opposed to her, however, have consistently been unable to marshal the requisite political forces or make a show of sufficient political muscle to drive her or those with whom she is aligned from office. As a consequence, Fontana, which sits next to a major rail line, two interstate freeways and a third state route that is also a freeway, has proven a magnet for warehouse development. There are substantial numbers of Fontana's 220,000 some residents – running to over 10,000, who are either passively or more actively opposed to the concept of further warehouse development in Fontana based upon the relatively poor pay and benefits provided to those who work in logistics facilities, the degree to which warehouse operators not only exploit those who work there but victimize nearby residents with their use of large diesel-powered semi-trucks with their unhealthy exhaust emissions and the bane of traffic gridlock they create. Fontanans, both those who are Warren supporters and in favor of further warehouse construction and those who are opposed to it, have taken to referring to the mayor as "Warehouse Warren."

Roberts, like the two other current members of Warren's ruling coalition – Peter Garcia and Phil Cothran Jr. – has gone right down the line in supporting Warren's warehouse building agenda.

When Fontana transitioned from a city that elected its council members at-large to one that is divided into council districts, Roberts fell into the city's District 4, lying primarily to the south of the city. District 4 contains the 10 Freeway and the rail corridor, which makes undeveloped property there particularly attractive to would-be warehouse developers. Year after year, and now decade after decade, as Roberts has supported the living environment of his constituents being loaded with more and more warehouses, resentment against him had grown. In 2014, 2018 and 2022, however, that resentment had not grown to a level that could overcome the factor of the money being provided by the development industry to Roberts through Warren that allowed him to send upbeat messaging to voters just prior to those elections to convince a sufficient number of them to keep him in office.

Over the last four years, however, Roberts' disregard for the residents he represents, many of whom live in residential subdivisions into and around which industrial uses and warehouses have encroached as a result of Warren's efforts to please the donors to her political war chest, has caught up with him. Whereas previously, the residents of Fontana District 4 have not been organized, activists within the community and nearby lying Bloomington, which has been subject to similar treatment by the San Bernardino County Land Use Services Division, the San Bernardino County Planning Commission and the San Bernardino County Board of Supervisors, have been aided by Center for Community Action and Environmental Justice in coordinating resistance to what is taking place within their living environment. A realization that the control City Hall exercises over the land use policy in the city has the most immediate and direct impact on their quality of life pushed them toward making inroads on Warren's hold on the council. Warren's opponents understood that the most vulnerable element of her grip on the council consisted of Roberts. Two opponents against Roberts emerged Ben Vasquez and Luz Perez. Vasquez assailed Roberts, saying that if he were elected he would push for Fontana to adopt a warehouse moratorium. Perez was slightly more moderate in her approach, suggesting that an outright ban on any type of development might prove politically unfeasible while Warren yet had control over the city as mayor and would be legally challengeable as well. "Where air pollution is a major concern," she said, "I will push for stronger warehouse and diesel truck pollution mitigation."

As of 6 p.m. today, Perez was well ahead of Roberts, with 3,336 or 43.89 percent of the 7,600 votes counted so far to Robert' 2,449 or 32.22 percent. Vasquez had 1,815 votes or 23.88 percent.

Of all of San Bernardino County, 72.78-square mile Hesperia has the greatest infrastructure deficit of all 22 cities and two incorporated towns. That is a product of a lack of diligence by the county and its planning/land use services division in the years before Hesperia's 1988 incorporation and the pro-development leanings of the members of the Hesperia City Council, which in some cases was exacerbated by out-and-out graft in the form of bribes provided to city officials. Consequently, subdivision after subdivision was constructed in the city without accompanying offsetting utilities and infrastructure, compounding a situation in which existing roads that were

by the bodyworn camera of the first deputy, Wyatt Eisenbrey, to arrive at the scene at 4:54:28 p.m., shows him parking on the right shoulder of the street near the extreme end of the front of the typically desert-landscaped yard of the Gainer home, with the perspective of the camera showing Eisenbrey removing what appear to be his sunglasses and affixing them atop of his head. As he approaches the front door of the home while moving around what appear to be bushes that stand in the yard some fifteen to twenty feet directly before the front door, Eisenbrey steps toward the front porch of the house, at which point the audio from the video activates. The deputy can be heard saying, as he approached the doorway "Where's he at?" Almost immediately, Gainer emerges into the hallway visible from the perspective of the doorway, carrying a hoe. He advances rapidly toward the deputy, who, it appears from the perspective of the bodyworn camera, to be retreating backwards from the entrance, while simultaneously, it appears, drawing his service gun and pointing it at Gainer. Eisenbrey can be heard saying, "Get back or you'll get shot." Again, from the perspective of Eisenbrey's bodyworn camera, it appears that Gainer is advancing on him more rapidly than Eisenbrey is succeeding in walking backwards, at which point, it appears, Eisenbrey to his right to be able to flee while running forward rather than stepping backwards in the face of Gainer advancing toward him. From the movement depicted on the video and the shadowing visible on the ground, as well as the rapid movement of Eisenbrey's left arm and empty hand and right arm and right hand carrying his service gun, it appears Eisenbrey is in full running mode away from the pursuing Gainer, who is no longer visible in the scope of the video's visual field. When the deputy wheels, apparently to his right to again face Gainer, a second deputy, Brandon Clancy, is visible off to the left of the visual field, while Gainer is on the ground.

A portion of the video taken from the perspective of Clancy's bodyworn camera shows Clancy to be the second deputy to arrive at the Gainer home, whare he parks his vehicle on the left shoulder of the street opposed to traffic, getting out of his vehicle at 4:55:01 and walking toward the Gainer home, more to the left of the bushes in front of the home than Eisenbrey, who came toward the house from the right of the bushes. Unlike Eisenbrey's bodyworn camera video, the audio is engaged from before Clancy gets out of his vehicle. The perspective of his bodyworn camera video shows that he approached the Gainer residence from the opposite direction than Eisenbrey, as Clancy's vehicle is parked on the left side of the street at the far end of the yard to the Gainer home opposite of Eisenbrey's vehicle, which is normalize it in school libraries and the tolerance for transsexualism within school settings. In the last instance, circumstances had evolved by 2020 in which school districts throughout the state were required to provide, without informing parents, on junior high school and high school campuses "gender-neutral changing rooms" in which students who left home in the attire deemed appropriate for the gender they were assigned at birth could don clothes normally worn by members of the opposite gender to wear while at school and change back into the clothes they had left home in that morning before returning home. California schools had adopted a policy, without informing parents, of accepting, during school hours, whatever gender identification and name students assumed for themselves at school and to honor the students' requests that they be able to keep their parents from knowing about their on-campus reorientation.

Prayer in American schools in general has been banned essentially since the 1960s.

In 2006, Sylvia Orozco, a parishioner at Calvary Chapel Chino Hills was elected to the Chino Valley School Board. In 2008, another Calvary Chapel congregant, James Na, was elected to the school board.

Shortly thereafter, Orozco and Na began to act in conformance with the dictums of the pastor at Calvary Chapel Chino Hills, Jack Hibbs. A denominationalist, Hibbs holds that Christians have a duty to stand up for their beliefs by either running for election to public office themselves or supporting other Christians who do run, and then, upon taking office, Christianize public policy. With Hibbs encouraged the members of Calvary Chapel and other churches to turn out for elections.

After Orozco and Na were in place, Hibbs choreographed requests that the Chino Valley Unified School District make Bible study part of the district curriculum. The district did so in 2010.

captains, and the International Association of Fire Fighters Local 1430, representing the city's firefighters. Upon completing his nomination papers for mayor and turning them into the Ontario City clerk's office to qualify his mayoral candidacy in July, Wapner was widely considered by political prognosticators to be the odd-on favorite to prevail in the Ontario mayoral contest in the November 3 election.

In tandem with Wapner's campaign for mayor, Jonathan Hagman, the son of one of Wapner's political allies, San Bernardino County Fourth District Supervisor Curt Hagman, had thrown his hat in the ring and was vying to move into the position spot on the city council representing the city's recently-created Third District, such that, if successful in the November election, young Hagman would effectively replace Wapner on the council and become, assuming Wapner was elected, a part of Wapner's ruling council coalition.

On July 26, however, the FBI served search warrants at his home as well as at the home and office of Curt Hagman, as well as at the homes and offices of attorney Frank Lizerraga, the legal representative of Wapner as well as his wife, Ontario City Councilwoman Daisy Macias, Wapner's wife, Judi, and Curt Hagman's wife, Rosanna. The same day, the FBI served search warrants at the office of Andy Sehremelis, a major political donor to Wapner's and Curt Hagman's campaigns, as well as at the home an office of media empire mogul James Su, who together with his family and employees, made substantial donations to Curt Hagman's political war chest. The FBI on July 26 had served subpoenas at Ontario City Hall and the offices of the Ontario International Airport Authority, the governing board of commissioners of which Wapner served as the chairman/president and Hagman was a commissioner.

The revelation of how far the federal investigation had advanced that accompanied word of the search warrants being served drew attention to previously existing accounts in the community relating to how Wapner, during his more than 30 years in elective office had become the most prolific fundraiser among local politicians in San Bernardino County history by shaking down individuals who had business before as & Mack Center at the University of Nevada Las Vegas, the post office and bookstore as well as Stanford University, the Howard T. Markey National Courts Building at Lafayette Square in Washington, D.C. and the John F. Kennedy Eternal Flame and gravesite at Arlington National Cemetery as well as the as the associate architect for the Soviet Embassy in Washington, D.C., Warnecke was considered well-suited for the assignment.

Known for Bauhaus and Modernist styles as well as advocating a contextual approach in the structures and monuments he designed, in delivering Rancho Cucamonga's center of governance, he deviated somewhat from what had been expected. Situated little more than a stone's throw from the intersection of Route 66 and Haven Ave is the Kremlinesque Rancho Cucamonga City Hall, a building that incorporates elements he wanted to include but did not in the Soviet Embassy in the nation's capitol.

Warnecke had a storied life, which ranged from being the tackle on the undefeated 1940 Stanford Indians football team to someone who had hobnobbed and rubbed shoulders with the nation's elite.

He had captured much of that in a series of accounts, a memoir as it were, but that compendium had not been edited or delivered to a publisher at the time of his death in 2010, shortly after he had eclipsed his 91st birthday. Rather, he had requested that his daughter Margo Warnecke Merck, who leads the Warnecke archives, put the manuscript in the right hands and see that it be published once it was polished. That book is now ready as Camelot's Architect: The Untold Story of Jackie Kennedy, Lafayette Square and a Secret Romance. It is to become available through River Grove Books on November 12. The Sentinel was entrusted with an advance copy.

Warnecke's narrative is filled with a host of interesting, indeed some historically significant facts and a few salacious details.

Jacqueline Kennedy had doubts about marrying Aristotle Onassis before their 1968 union and apparently regrets afterward, according to Warnecke, who was close to the presidential couple as an advising architect before President John Kennedy's November 22, 1963 assassination and then grew intimate with the president's widow in the years after his death.

Despite Warnecke's substantial success in the field of architecture, financial issues that dogged him in the mid-1960s appear to have prevented him from marrying Jackie Kennedy, as the financial demands she was subjected after President Kennedy's death as a consequence of her situation and lifestyle could not be met by what was being provided to her by the Kennedy Family or the modest inheritance she unpaved or inadequately paved were neglected and went decades without repair or maintenance. Now, several political generations past the city's founding, the city council is made up of individuals who neither collectively nor individually understand what they and the city are up against. The city's voters, particularly those in the city's District 2, are saddled with the well-meaning but ineffectual and unsophisticated Allison Lee.

Lee's presence on the city council is nearly as much accidental as intentional.

In 2022, Hesperia faced a unique situation in which its redistricting and election schedule meant that the District 2 council seat held by Bill Holland was to expire in December 2022, and no one had filed to run in the November municipal election The city council, in a special meeting on August 24, 2022, canceled the November 8 election and instead sought applicants for a four-year appointment to fill the District 2 seat Seven residents applied, including Lee, at that time a 22-year Hesperia resident and business owner with her husband running an automotive service business in the city

The council evaluated the applications and selected Lee to serve the full term from December 2022 through December 2026. Lee sought election this year and was opposed by Jessica Navarro and David Bashar Ellis.

As of 6 p.m. today, Navarro, with 1,340 or 44.86 percent of the 2,987 votes counted, held a comfortable lead over Lee, who had 1,340 votes or 33.65 percent. David Bashar Ellis had 642 votes or 21.49 percent.

Montclair over the last three decades has been among the county's most stable cities politically, with relatively minimal turnover among its mayoral and city council positions, with the death of sitting mayors/council members accounting almost as much for change on the council as officeholders being voted out. Bill Ruh was first elected to the city council in Montclair in 1998. The only elected municipal officeholders in San Bernardino County who have been in office longer than he has are Chino Mayor Eunice Ulloa, Fontana Councilman John Roberts, Ontario Councilman Alan Wapner, Rialto City Clerk Barbara McGee, Montclair Mayor/former Councilman John Dutrey and Ontario Mayor/former Councilman Paul Leon. Montclair, like only three other cities in San Bernardino County, has not transitioned to district voting. In this Montclair municipal election, no one opposed Mayor Dutrey and both Ruh and Corysa Martinez vied for re-election in the at-larges contest for the two positions on the city council up for election this year. Victor Mendez and Alice Garcia jumped into the race.

As of 6 p.m. today Martinez was in first place with 2,757 or 33.37 percent of the 8,261 votes now counted and Garcia had captured second with 1,988 votes or 24.06 percent. Ruh was trailing with 1,910 votes or 21.12 percent, placing him in third and therefore off the council if he does not close the ground between him and Garcia and pass her by November 16. Mendez is solidly in fourth place with 1,605 votes or 19.43 percent.

In Ontario, between them, Mayor Paul Leon and Councilman Alan Wapner have nearly 60 years in municipal office, with Wapner having served continuously as a councilman since his election to the post in 1994 and Leon having served as a councilman from 1998 until 2005 and as mayor from 2005 to the present. During that same period, Wapner established himself as the most prolific political fundraiser among local politicians in San Bernardino County history, taking in more the $3.8 million. Leon during his 28 years was the recipient of nearly $2.4 million. In many cases, that money was being given by owners, administrators or principals of businesses with development proposals or contract/franchise applications with the city who expected, or were led to expect, something in return, i.e., the support of the mayor and city council with regard to the approval of those proposals or applications. Indeed, over the years, Wapner in particular had an established reputation for engaging in pay-to-play politics in which the money being provided to his campaign war chest were recognized as quid pro quos or bribes which ensured that the donors were to be taken care of. There was a significant degree of commonality among those donors to Wapner and to Leon, though Wapner claimed the lion's share of that money. Those endowing Wapner's and Leon's electioneering funds were making hefty donations as well as to another member of the council, Jim Bowman, who had served on the city council from 1986 to 1988 and again from 1990 to 1998 before he ran successfully once again in 2006 and has served on the city council ever since. In this way Leon, Wapner and Bowman became entrenched members of the Ontario Establishment, throughout which there was an understanding that governance in Ontario had been corrupted, infusing virtually every element of City Hall, from the administration downward and involving all departments of the city, most notefully, the police and fire departments, the employee unions for which were Leon's Wapner's and Bowman's leading donors. In 2018, Jason Anderson, who had been a member of the city council from 2004 until 2008 and while in private practice in 2014 had been retained by the city to help Wapner out of a political jam when he was caught beating his daughter in public and had been intimidating his political opponents, was elected district attorney. For approaching two decades the corruption had become so entrenched in Ontario that Wapner and to a lesser extent Leon and Bowman had come to believe they could act with impunity, as the governmental that existed to most logically hold them in check – the police department and the district attorney's office – had been coopted.

Meanwhile, Leon, a preacher with the Hope Chapel in Ontario, from shortly after the time he was first elected mayor of Ontario in 2005, was grooming Daisy Macias, the then-14 year-old daughter of a parishioner at his church, for a possible career in politics. He employed her doing clerical work at Hope Chapel and when she reached the age of majority appointed her to the city's park and Recreation Commission and then to the Ontario Library Board, of which she became chairwoman. Leon assisted her in landing first a decent paying position as an account executive with Old Republic Home Protection and then as the community relations manager with National Community Renaissance and the Hope For Housing Foundation, two entities associated with developer Jeff Burum, who has over the years been a generous donor to the Leon and Wapner campaigns. Leon had genuinely hoped that Macias might eventually be elected to the city council, where she might become a reliable vote in the ruling coalition he was hoping to build.

Below the surface was a rivalry between Leon and Wapner that it was generally in neither's own political interest to have revealed to the world. In actuality, throughout most of the time that Leon was mayor, it was Wapner who was the most dynamic political force in Ontario, as he had early on forged a working relationship with Bowman and Councilwoman Debra Dorst Porada, who was first elect to the city council to form what was essentially a ruling coalition. In this way, it was Wapner who was calling the shots and dictating that those entities who were providing him along with the others campaign donations should not be crossed up when votes relating to their projects or contracts came before the city council. In this way, because the enmity between him and Wapner was kept buried, Leon could maintain the fiction publicly that what was going on in Ontario was a product of his administration. Still, with regard to most certainly the donors with the deepest pockets, there was a recognition that Wapner was he big man on campus at City Hall.

Following the 2022 election, Wapner resolved that he was going to no longer abide keeping secret that he was Ontario's actual leader and that it was time that Leon's status as Ontario's official leader come to an end. He would cease the charade of being a mere member of Mayor Leon's city council and that he would become mayor himself.

One of the first things Wapner did was to poach Leon's presumed future council ally. As the 2024 election approached, he approached Macias, who was a resident of District 2, telling her she should make a claim of living in District 4 and run for the city council in the 2024 election. Macias complied, taking out candidacy papers, augmenting them with the requisite number of signatures of District 4 residents and then turning them in to the city clerk. Very shortly after Macias's candidacy was qualified, Wapner transferred $40,000 out of his campaign fund to Macias's campaign and then, a few weeks later, another $10,150.27, from his campaign account to Macias's political fund. Wapner then put the arm on a whole host of those who had donated money to him in the past to provide Macias with an additional $93,000.

In the November 5, 2024 General Election, Macias, receiving 36.41 percent of the vote in the five-candidate race, captured the District 4 council post.

Wapner kept his mayoral ambition under wraps. He started 2025 with $288,330.42 in his city council campaign fund. He continued to pressure donors for money. Throughout 2025, he collected money for another city council run, but also created a second account to finance his run for mayor. Throughout 2025, he deposited $172,250 in donations into his council campaign fund and another $125,800 into his mayoral campaign fund. Between January 1 and June 30 of 2026, he deposited $2,950 into his council campaign

Panic Button, Alert Button, ICEBlock, People Over Papers and ResistMap apps manifested in the late spring of 2025 as social media platforms that exist as a means for illegal aliens to resist federal immigration enforcement action. Utilizing encrypted messaging that coordinate with those having access to media sites, the Panic Button, Alert Button, ICEBlock, People Over Papers and ResistMap webmasters provide on-line maps tracking the Immigration and Customs Enforcement Department task forces' locations. Moreover, they can send out hundreds, indeed thousands of text messages instantaneously informing recipients of the exact locations of Immigration and Customs Enforcement Department raids and operations. In response, protesters can in a short span of time swarm into the area. Large numbers of bystanders and spectators can inhibit the federal agents actions.

received from her father, John Vernou Bouvier III, a once-successful Wall Street stockbroker whose wealth had been squandered through gambling and poor financial decisions by the time of his 1957 death.

Jacqueline Bouvier and John Kennedy, then a U.S. senator, wed in 1953.

Three years later, Kennedy, then 39, made a major splash on the U.S. political scene with a speech at the Democratic National Convention when Adlai E. Stevenson was selected for the second straight time to go up against Republican Dwight Eisenhower. That same year, Senator made the acquaintance of Warnecke, who at that time was a rising light in the architectural world. Apparently, Jackie Kennedy was not present, as Camelot's Architect spells out that :

Jackie and Warnecke first met in October 1962, when he was scheduled to meet with her to review plans for Lafayette Square, on which he was working at the time. The night before that meeing, Warnecke attended a dinner at the British embassy, at which the president and First Lady were also present. Warnecke approached her during the formal dinner.

"I decided the best way to meet her would be to ask her for a dance," according to Camelot's Architect. "She turned around and looked up at me somewhat astonished as I said, 'Would you like to have the next dance with me?' I paused and added, "I'm the architect you are supposed to meet tomorrow at 11 a.m." Off we went to the dance floor.

According to Warnecke, "The next day, we were all assembled for our meeting. Jackie arrived, wearing a pink suit with a navy, velvet-trimmed collar. I could tell she liked the design immediately."

Thereafter, according to Warnecke, President Kennedy and members of his family consulted with him on a multitude of questions relating to building construction.

It was during that time that Warnecke, who was recently divorced, learned that a younger woman he was dating was also engaged in a physical relationship with the president.

In early 1963, Warnecke had gone to Boston scouting locations for the future Kennedy presidential library. While they were aboard Air Force One, the president asked Warnecke about his personal life. Warnecke said he was about to embark on a vacation with the woman – whom he identified to the president but did not name in the memoir – to the Caribbean. That apparently triggered a phone call from President Kennedy to the woman.

"This was a trip we had both been looking forward to," according to Warnecke. "When I reached her on the telephone, she told me something had happened while I was away and, as a result, she could no longer take the trip."

Shortly after returning from Boston, Warnecke met the woman for dinner.

"About halfway through the meal, she felt she couldn't put off any longer what she needed to tell me – why our trip had to be canceled," Warnecke's memori states. "The reason, she admitted, was the president had entered into her life. She was now romantically involved with Jack and felt she could no longer go on the trip with me. I couldn't believe what I was hearing, especially after my recent discussion with the president about her. I shrugged and said 'Okay, I'll cancel our vacation.' After all, I told myself this is the leader of the free world. What could I do?"

According to Warnecke, President Kennedy had liaisons with the woman while Jackie and their children Caroline and John Jr. were on weekend sojourns to the Virginia countryside.

Like virtually everyone else at that time, Warnecke was thrown into a state of shock when John Kennedy was assassinated.

"I was particularly jolted by the sight of Jackie returning with Jack's body to Washington," he wrote. "Most poignant to me was that she was wearing the same pink suit she wore the day I first presented her with our design plans for Lafayette Square."

The Kennedy family turned to Warnecke to prepare the gravesite memorial for the slain president. Jackie Kennedy and the president's brother, Robert, requested that he go with them to survey the plot allotted for that purpose at the Arlington National Cemetery.

"Neither of them spoke a word," Warnecke recollected. "As we slowly pushed through the media corps, suddenly we came upon the little white picket fence surrounding the temporary grave. Before us flickered the eternal flame, at the sight of which Bobby and Jackie dropped to their knees and crossed themselves."

Warnecke's nattative continues, "During the return trip, Jackie and Bobby asked me if I would undertake the design of the grave. The location of the cross, the name and dates on the stone marking the location of the president's grave — they were also approved by Jackie."

Warnecke said that over the ten or so months thereafter, "as much as I was attracted to her [Jacqueline], I held back. We would meet in my office to work on the design of the grave, but that was all. But it all built a kind of tension — a personal and caring tension between us."

It was during a weekend meeting with Jacqueline at the home of her parents, Janet and Hugh Auchincloss, Hammersmith Farm in Rhode Island, in the fall of 1964 to review a stonecutter's work for the gravesite, Warnecke said, "when we first opened up our feelings toward each other – a weekend beyond our imagination. We both secretly knew we were in love with each other.

According to Warnecke, "one thing led to another," and their relationship lasted for three years.

"I was invited by Janet and Hugh Auchincloss to come to Hammersmith Farm for Thanksgiving," Warnecke wrote. "Jackie had suggested bringing everyone so we could all be together with both her children, Caroline and John John. I decided to have some fun with my children and not tell them where we were going. I'll never forget ringing the doorbell and Jackie greeting us. By the end of the year, our thoughts of a future together had advanced to the point where the subject of marriage came up. The question was when?"

To members of the Kennedy family, it seemed that John's widow was moving on too quickly in the aftermath of the president's assassination. She brought Warnecke to the family compound in Hyannis Port on Cape Cod in late 1964. That may have ushered a degree of sepoaration between Jacqueline and her in-laws.

Warnecke and Jacqueline Kennedy kept their romance under wraps, so they could avoid intense scrutiny that she was subject to after her husband's assassination.

Over the next two years, the relationship intensified to the point where they were on the brink of marriage, according to Warnecke, who expressed the view that "We were truly in a beautiful world we had created for each other."

In the summer of 1966, at his suggestion, Kennedy rented a house in Honolulu, where he was designing the State Capitol. They sought to throw the paparazzi off the track by Jacqueline claiming she was there at the invitation of a mutual friend.

"As soon as Jackie set foot in her Hawaiian house, which she had rented for a month, she phoned me," Warnecke wrote. "She asked me to come and see her place on the beach, about a mile south of my house. As I approached from the beach, I spotted Jackie. There she was, lying face down on a large beach towel with an enormous straw hat covering her head. But, to my amazement, not a single piece of clothing covered the rest of her body. She was completely nude. I took her by surprise and she gasped, but she could see I liked what I saw. She looked beautiful and, of course, relieved that it was me and not a stranger who had discovered her basking in the tropical sunshine."

Jacqueline was capable of risque and provocative behavior when left to her own devices, according to Warnecke.

They were yet in Hawaii, Warnecke recollected, one night in 1966.

"We may have had a drink or two before planning to go out to dinner, so I went to get my jacket," according to his memoir. "What I remember next is that the car was already out of the garage, pointing toward the road, when I slid behind the wheel and turned on the ignition. With my eyes fixed on the door, I waited for Jackie to come out of the house"

It tuned out, however, that she "was already in the car, sitting in the back, smiling. What amazed me most was that she did not have a stitch of clothing on. I don't know what possessed me, but off we went in my canvas-topped convertible. I turned around a couple of times to behold this extraordinary sight but didn't quite know what to make of it. She kept saying, "I'm all yours. All of me. I'm letting you know how much I love you." Soon we arrived at a beautiful spot at the edge of the sea that was ours alone. At last, surrounded by moonlight and the sounds of the nearby ocean, we laughed, then fully enjoyed the moment. My goal of bringing Jackie back to a normal life had been realized."

Ironically, because of his devotion to the president's widow, he put himself into a situation in which he was unable to marry her.

A major consideration for her throughout her life was the wealth of her suitors. Prior to her marriage to John Kennedy, she was engaged in 1951 to marry stockbroker John G. W. Husted Jr. after having made his acquaintance at Vassar College. She broke off the engagement when she felt his income was too low. In fall of 1966, Warnecke was shocked to learn that the substantial outlays his architectural firm had made in expanding his firm and taking on and pursuing projects that remained in various states of suspension or non-completion had resulted in him accumulating more than $1 million in debt.

"Because I had taken nearly the entire year of 1964 to personally oversee each and every step of the design of President Kennedy's memorial grave, I had ignored generating new business during this incredibly emotional period of personal and national grieving," he wrote. "All this and the economic situation of the time were finally catching up with me."

He had been on the verge of proposing marriage to Jacqueline prior to that, and the relationship was headed in that direction. But because of his tenuous financial position, it was obvious to him, and ultimately recognized by Jacqueline that he could not maintain the lavish lifestyle to which she was accustomed nor provide the security she needed.

When he disclosed to Kennedy the financial challenges he was facing,"She was shocked and upset. Our romance now had a harsh new reality hovering over it. Jackie needed special protection and privacy. I coffers and $323,199.08 in donations were made to his mayoral fund. Under California election law, Wapner was at liberty to move money in his council campaign fund into his mayoral campaign fund.

In contrast, Leon, who started 2025 with $15,781 in his campaign account, collected $48,600 in campaign donations in all of 2025 and followed that up with $47,849 in donations received in the first six months of 2026, giving him $112,230 with which to hold off Wapner's challenge, fueled by the $912,529.08 he had on hand in his combined campaign accounts.

By mid-2025, the cat was out of the bag, and it was known that Wapner was looking to rip the mayoral gavel from Leon's grasp.

Wapner nailed down the endorsements of the Ontario Police Association, representing the police department's officers up to the rank of sergeant; the City of Ontario Police Management Group, representing the police department's lieutenants and captains; the Ontario Firefighters Association, representing the city's firemen; the Teamsters Union, which represents roughly 380 Ontario municipal employees; and the American Federation of State, County & Municipal Employees Local 3061, which represents roughly 1,260 of the city's employees. Macias, who had been demonstrating during council meetings throughout much of 2025 that she was inclined toward accepting Wapner in the role of Ontario's primary citizen, then delivered the coup de grace, announcing that she was endorsing her council colleague rather than the mayor.

Wapner had qualified his candidacy for mayor with the city clerk and the San Bernardino County Registrar of Voters. It certainly appeared that Leon's goose was cooked.

On July 28, a mere ten days before the candidacy filing deadline for the November 3 election, the FBI raided Wapner's house and home office, while serving further search warrants at the offices of some of his political supporters and the homes and offices of some of his other political associates. The FBI served subpoenas for a wealth of documents at Ontario City Hall as well as the administrative offices of the Ontario International Airport Authority, the governmental entity overseeing Ontario Airport, the board for which Wapner was the president/chairman.

Wapner rescinded his mayoral candidacy application and refiled to run for election in the city's 3rd Council District. As a parting shot, he called upon Macias to take up a challenge of Leon as he was ducking out of the race. Again, Macias followed his instructions.

As the electoral season began with the close of the filing period on August 7, Leon and Macias found themselves vying against one another and two other mayoral hopefuls, Kevin Kizzee and Nicolo LaLama.

In District 3, Wapner found himself up against Michael Rios, Larry Trinidad and D'Andre Lampkin.

As it would turn out, a huge player in the 2026 Ontario Municipal Election was James Previti, the billionaire owner of Forecast Homes, Frontier Homes, Guardian Capital and the Previti Group. Previti put $250,000 into the Ontario Committee on Ethics.

Previti approached Macias, informing her he would bankroll an effort to get her elected if she would disassociate herself from Wapner, for whom he had a deep and abiding personal enmity. Macias agreed to do so.

Once the race was under way in earnest, the Ontario Committee on Ethics spent a total of $1,100 on September 22 designing two mailers attacking Leon, another $1,994.15 on September 23 for data for those mailers and $17,900.01 on September 29 for one of those mailers and $17,966.34 on a second mailer.

On September 22, the Ontario Committee on Ethics spend 550 designing a mailer supporting Macias and on September 25 spent $17,951.72 to print the mailer. The Ontario Committee on Ethics on September 22 spend $550 to design a mailer in favor of Macias and on September 25 spent $17,951.71 on that mailer itself.

On October 12, the Ontario Committee on Ethics spent $7,500 on a television ad attacking Leon and the same day spent another $1,100 on a television ad attacking Leon.

On October 12, the Ontario Committee on Ethics spent $1,100 on a television ad supporting Macias.

On October 17, the Ontario Committee on Ethics spent $17,960.62 on a mailer supporting of Macias and another $17,903.26 on a mailer supporting her.

On October 17, the Ontario Committee on Ethics spent $1,100 on a Television ad attacking Leon and another $7,500 on a television ad attacking Leon.

On October 17, the Ontario Committee on Ethics spent $61,865.59 on a mailer supporting Macias.

On October 17, the Ontario Committee on Ethics spent $7,765.58 supporting Larry Trinidad in his run for 3rd District councilman.

On October 24, the Ontario Committee on Ethics spent $550 designing a mailer attacking Wapner with regard to his run for 3rd District councilman and on the same day spent $7,254.38 printing the Wapner attack mailer.

On October 24, the Ontario Committee on Ethics spent $550 designing a mailer attacking Leon and another $17,802.73 printing that mailer. Also on October 24, the Ontario Committee on Ethics spent $1,500 on the production of a television ad attacking Leon and $1,100 on a radio spot attacking Leon.

On October 24, the Ontario Committee on Ethics spent $550 on research for a mailer in support of Macias and $17,885.61 to produce the mailer supporting Macias.

On October 27 the Ontario Committee on Ethics spent $16,019.19 on a mailer supporting Macias and the same day spent another $15,179.83 on a mailer in support of Macias.

On October 29 the Ontario Committee on Ethics spent $1,500 on a television ad attaching Leon.

On October 30, the Ontario Committee on Ethics spent $550 and then another $550 on designing mailers attacking Leon and the same day spent $17,360.11 and $7,890 and another $29,213.88 on producing mailers attacking Leon.

As of 6 p.m. today, Macias was leading in the mayoral race, having claimed 11,434 or 37.71 percent of the 30,450 votes tallied to this point, ahead of Leon and his 9,225 votes or 30.3 percent. Kizzee and LaLama account for third and fourth place, with 5,141 votes or 16.88 percent and 4,600 or 15.11 percent, respectively.

As of 6 p.m. today, Rios, with 2,949 votes or 29.56 percent, is out in front in the District 3 council race, ahead of Wapner, who is 16 votes behind him, with 2,933 votes of the 9,977 counted, equivalent to 29.4 percent. Trinidad is in third place with 2,383 votes or 23.88 percent , and Lampkin in fourth, claiming 1,712 votes or 17.6 percent.

Ana Gonzalez, with 6,169 votes or 19.21 percent, has displaced incumbent Edward Montoya Jr., who received 3,726 votes or 11.6 percent, on the Rialto City Council. That race featured nine candidates vying for two positions. Incumbent Ed Scott was reelected with 6,528 votes or 20.32 percent. Montoya finished fourth behind Rafael Trujillo, who received 3,986 votes or 12.41 percent.

In San Bernardino, in the First Ward, Virginia Marquez, who had been on the city council from 2009 until 2018, and Ron Alvarado vied against one another after the incumbent, Ted Sanchez was defeated in the June Primary. In the Second Ward, Benito Barrios, who had been on the city council from 2014 to 2018, and Christian Shaughnessy had prevailed in the June Primary over incumbent Sandra Ibarra. In the Fourth Ward, incumbent Fred Shorett had finished second in the June Primary featuring five candidates behind Joe Salas.

As of today, Alvarado, with 1,636 of the votes or 54.15 percent of the count so far in the First Ward, was ahead of Marquez, with 1,385 or 45.85 percent. In the Second Ward, Shaughnessy was on top with 1,721 votes or 55. 77 percent to Barrios's 1,365 or 44.23 percent. The incumbent Shorett, with 2,241 votes or 35.79 percent was convincingly trailing Salas, who had 4,021 votes or 64.21 percent.

In Twentynine Palms, McArthur Wright, the incumbent in that city's Council District 5, was losing to Shanese Risper by a narrow margin. Wright has, as of today at 6 p.m. 222 votes or 44.31 percent and Risper has 237 votes or 47.31 percent, with 42 votes or 8.38 percent having been cast for write-in candidate Marcelino Ryan.

another member of the Calvary Chapel Chino Hills Congregation, was elected to the school board. With the religious trifecta of Orozco, Na and Cruz in place and in control of the district, there followed increasingly bold efforts to insert conservative Christian activism into the district's educational curriculum. Without any official passage of policy but rather simply by doing so, the board began including benedictions at the beginning of the school board meetings. It then moved toward allowing school prayer.

This religiosity in a public forum was challenged by 23 parents of some of the district's students, who in 2014 were represented by the Madison, Wisconsin-based Freedom From Religion Foundation in a suit filed in Federal Court in Riverside against the district. The suit resulted in a U.S. District Court Judge Jesus Bernal in 2016 issuing a ruling, later upheld on appeal, that the district desist in evangelism, extending to so-called Christian witnessing as well as "prayers, Bible readings and proselytizing" in school settings. The legal battle with the Freedom From Religion Foundation over the prayer issue resulted in the district sustaining a ruling that it needed to cover the Freedom From Religion Foundation's $282,602 legal costs in addition to the district's payments to its own attorneys. Members of the Christian traditionalist reform movement, nevertheless, considered the expenditures the district made in fighting the good fight at reforming school district policy to be money well spent.

Orozco in 2018 left the school board to engage in an ultimately unsuccessful effort to be elected to the Chino City Council, which temporarily returned the school district to secular control. In 2022, however, two other members of Calvery Chapel Chino Hills, Sonja Shaw and Jon Monroe, were elected to the Chino Valley School Board. Upon elevating Shaw to the position of school board president. The four-person ruling coalition of Shaw, Na, Cruz and Monroe embarked on an effort to acculturate public education in Chino Valley in accordance with Christian principles.

In 2023, the Chino Valley Unified School District, on the strength of a vote by Shaw, Na, Cruz and Monroe, adopted a parental notification policy requiring teachers to inform parents of any student who reidentified his or her gender at school from the gender indicated on his or her birth certificate in a classroom setting. This ran counter to the advisal and recommended policy advocated by the California Department of Education and the state's prevailing political establishment, a civil suit in San Bernardino County Superior Court to enjoin the Chino Valley Unified School District from enforcing its parental notification policy, asserting the policy "puts transgender and gender nonconforming students in danger of imminent, irreparable harm from the consequences of forced disclosures" and that as a consequence of the school district action, such students were "under threat'' and "in fear," facing "the risk of emotional, physical, and psychological harm from non-affirming or unaccepting parents or guardians." The challenge of the policy was upheld by San Bernardino County Superior Court. Furthermore, the California legislature passed AB 1955, prohibiting schools from making a practice of notifying parents if their children are assuming a gender different from the one assigned them at birth. Immediately after it was signed into law by Governor Newsom on July 15, 2024, the Chino Valley Unified School District and eight parents of district students, represented by attorney Emily Ray of the Austin, Texas-based Liberty Justice Center, sued Newsom, Bonta and Thurmond in an effort to prevent the enforcement of AB 1955.

The California Attorney General's Officer filed

As that legal back-and-forth was raging in state court, another civil lawsuit, Mirabelli vs. Olson, relating to two teachers in the Escondido School District suing the district in which they worked over that district's order that they not inform the parents of their students about the names they used in a classroom setting when those names reflected a difference from those students' biological gender, was wending its way through federal court. Ultimately, in Mirabelli vs. Olson, Judge Roger Benitez ruled that a school district or educators to whom parents have entrusted their children cannot actively deceive those parents.

In March, the U.S. Supreme Court majority ruled that parents who made inquiries with regard to the issue had a right to be told about their children's sexual orientation presentation at school.

As federal law takes precedence over state law, the Chino Unified School District, which had taken a shellacking in California state court in seeking to propound its conservative vision in the context of classroom education, found itself vindicated the Ontario City Council and the Ontario International Airport Authority, such as development proposals or applications as well as bids on contracts or franchises that were subject to approval by the city council or airport authority board. What was suddenly apparent to dozens, scores, hundreds and thousands and eventually tens of thousands of Ontario's residents was the pay-to-play ethos that had gripped Ontario City Hall over the previous three decades and how Wapner had risen to the top in a system of governance dominated by graft and bribery.

Acting quickly before the filing period for candidacy in the November 3 election lapsed on August 7, Wapner prevailed upon Jonathan Hagman to rescind his candidacy in the city's Third District and then withdrew himself as a candidate for mayor before refiling a a candidate in the Third District. He persuaded his political ally, Fourth District City Councilwoman Daisy Macias, to pull and file papers to take his place as a mayoral candidate opposing Leon. Both Jonathan Hagman and Macias obliged Wapner. By the August 7 deadline, both Wapner, as a District Three city council candidate, and Macias, as a mayoral hopeful, were qualified to be on the November 3 ballot.

Also running in District Three were D'Andre Lampkin, Larry Trinidad and Michael Rios.

Leon and Macias were facing each other in the mayor's race, in which Kevin Kizzee and Nicolo Lalama were also vying.

Wapner faced the challenge of much negative publicity that attended the revelations regarding the criminal investigation the FBI was carrying out into him and a multiplicity of his actions, votes and political associates. While that was a relative disadvantage, he had eight successful election/reelections for city council under his belt and the additional experiential advantage of a previous successful election to the Ontario-Montclair School Board, superior name recognition and was able to transfer all of the money he had accumulated to finance his mayoral campaign into his council campaign coffers.

Whereas in bygone years, prior to mail-in voting, in all but the closest of electoral contests the outcome was determined by the tallying of votes on cast ballots that took place in the four hours before midnight of the election day after the 8 p.m. closing of polls or in the early a.m. hours of the following day, with the advent of mail-in ballots, the determination of election outcomes has now been delayed in many cases for up to 13 days after the closing of the polls on election day.

At 10 p.m., when the early arriving mail-in ballots received by election day were counted along with the results from the polling precincts around the city were counted Wapner was in the lead, with 2,006 or 31.15 percent of the 6,439 votes in the race processed up to that point. He was followed by Rios, who claimed 1,876 voter endorsements or 29.13 percent; Trinidad with 1,480 votes or 22.98 percent and Lampkin, with 1,077 votes or 16.73 percent.

It appeared that Wapner's fundraising advantage, which had allowed him to run a campaign that featured radio and television spots, mailers touting his experience and accomplishments in office, newspaper ads, signs and phone banks, had carried the day at the polls on November 3, as well as in the days leading up to it when the voters in Ontario's Third District had filled in their mail ballots.

In the mayor's race, the results established a ratio between the four competitors that has essentially remained intact over the next three days: Macias captured 7,332 or 38.63 percent of the 18,979 votes counted by that point, outdistancing the incumbent, Leon, who polled 6,137 votes or 32.34 percent, with Kizzee in a distant third place with 3,175 votes or 16.73 percent and Lalama in fourth with 2,335 votes or 12.30 percent.

Two hours later, at midnight, the totals in the District 3 had changed, but in a way that was barely perceptible, given that only 43 more votes had come in to be counted. Wapner had picked up three votes, so that his total now stood at 2,009 or 30.99 percent of the 6,482 votes received overall, down slightly from where he had stood previously, but not to a degree that was alarming for his camp. Still, things were trending positively for Rios, who picked up 17 votes to reach 1,893 or 29.20 percent. Trinidad, likewise, had moved up on Wapner, capturing 15 more votes, giving him a subtotal of 1,495 or 23.06 percent. Lampkin, too, had gained slightly on the leader, as he brought in another eight votes, such that he now had 1,085 or 16.74 percent.

Two hours later, at 2 a.m., a significant number of further votes, 871, had arrived and were counted, which upped the number of votes tallied to 7,353. Wapner was still out in front and the trending appeared to be generally in his favor. Of the 871 ballots that had arrived, 234 were marked for him, boosting his vote total to 2,243 while dropping his percentage to 30.49 percent. Rios, meanwhile picked up fewer votes than had Wapner, that being 197, pushing him to a subtotal of 2,090, whereby he lost ground to the incumbent councilman. Trinidad made a more impressive show during that two hours, bringing in 267 votes, which pumped his total to 1,762 and 23.95 percent, which, given his persisting third place position, was still not perceived as a threat to Wapner. Lampkin garnered 173 new votes, putting him at 1,258, leaving him well off the pace with 17.10 percent.

At 4 a.m. on November 4, there was another dump of 781 ballots cast within Ontario's Third District. At that point, 8,134 ballots in the district were in and counted. Wapner yet appeared to be holding his own, as 198 of those contained votes for him, putting him at 2,441 votes. His performance relative to the others did, however, drop him to 29.99 percent, putting him below the 30 percent threshold. Rios, was making strides, even if they did not appear to be on a strong enough pace to push him into the lead. He collared 210 votes, keeping him in a strong second place with 2,305 votes and 28.32 percent. Trinidad made an even more vertical jump, hauling in 226 votes. Still, with 1,988, votes, his 24.42 percent left him way back. Similarly, Lampkin's gain of 142 votes, raising his total to 1,400 or 17.2 percent did nothing to put Wapner's lead in danger.

The next tally was released 14 hours later, at 6 p.m. on Wednesday. At that point, however, no further ballots originating from Ontario's Third District beyond what had been counted as of 4 a.m. that moring were tallied.

24 hours later, on Thursday November 5, 730 ballots from District 3 in Ontario were processed by the registrar of voters office. Wapner saw his total rise by 195 votes, to 2,636 votes, which entailed a modest drop in his percentage of the vote in the four-way race to 29.74 percent. Rios added 246 votes, such that his tally was 22,551, less than 100 votes behind Wapner, another significant threshold, representing 28.78 percent of the overall 8,864 votes case by the district's residents that had been counted. Trinidad, who pulled in 169 votes, lost ground to Wapner, and his total of 2,157 was more than 400 behind the leader, and his percentage of 24.33 percent put him over 5 percent down. Lampkin scored 169 more votes, but he too was failing to close the gap separating him from the lead, as he had 1,520 votes or 17.15 percent.

Another day passed and at 6 p.m. today, Friday November 6, the processing of another 1,113 ballots was reported. Of those, 297 designated votes for Wapner. That number was surpassed, significantly, by the ballots marked in favor of Rios: 398. Trinidad, losing ground to Wapner, gathered 226 votes. Lampkin brought in a respectable 192 votes. When the numbers were counted, counted again and then tallied a third time just to make sure, Wapner was no longer at the head of the back. Rios had overcome his 85 vote deficit to Wapner the previous day to zoom into first place with 2,949 votes of the 9,977 that had been cast and counted thus far, or 29.56 percent, to Wapner's 2,933 votes or 29.40 percent. Rios had assumed first place. The margin of difference was a mere 16 votes, yet one that put Wapner, who had never, in eight municipal races never tasted the bitter ashes of defeat, in the role of a prospective loser.

The San Bernardino County Registrar of Voters' next scheduled posting of election results is to be made on Saturday at 6 p.m.

Conservative Values Proponents Take Drubbing In School Board, State Superintendent Races from Page 7

in fighting what many considered to be the excessively liberal philosophy of the predominant number of professional educators who had taken over the California public school system.

Meanwhile. In the Redlands Unified School District, for decades, as was the case in the vast majority of school districts throughout California, the liberalism of the California Teachers Association's approach to education had been the watchword. In 2024, however two of the school board's four-person liberal-leaning ruling majority were replaced with the election of Candy Olson and Jeannette Wilson, who came into office as the consequence of intensive electioneering assistance efforts by so-called conservative activists during the course of that year's election season.

What was anticipated was that the city's liberals would reach out to Board Member Michelle Rendler, the lone centrist on the panel, to see if she could be brought into an alignment with the board's two progressives, Patty Hollohan and Melissa Ayala-Quintero to ensure that the district would continue to adhere to the value system and policies favored by the State of California's current educational establishment. Remarkably, in the face of Olson's and Wilson's elections, more than a dozen of what has since been characterized as the community's radical leftists, in a series of politically tone-deaf gyrations, pressed both personal and deliberative attacks, in some case using vulgar and pointed terms, against Rendler.

Ultimately, Rendler found herself thrown rightward, essentially into the Olson's and Wilson's camp. This enabled Olson and Wilson and their supporters to achieve changes with regard to district policy that would not have been possible merely on the strength of their two votes alone

Olson and Wilson, joined by Rendler, who had been elevated to the position of board president, passed several policies aligned with conservative positions on education, curriculum, and student conduct. These measures were supported by the "conservative" faction and considered anathema to the values of the district's more progressive trustees, who therefore opposed them. Olson, Wilson and Rendler, approved a book removal policy allowing the board to appoint a committee to review and remove materials deemed "pervasively pornographic," "sexually explicit" or "blasphemous." These restrictions extended to textbooks and instructional materials used in classrooms and libraries, not just library books. The board troika passed a ban on obscene material in classrooms without a precise definition, which was criticized by opponents as vague and potentially censorious. The board majority also put into place restrictions on flag displays, limiting classroom flag displays to the U.S. flag, California flag, and U.S. military flags. This effectively removed lesbian/gay/bisexual/transsexual/queer and pride flags and other non-traditional symbols which had previously been present in classrooms and elsewhere on district campuses. In a 3-to-2 vote with Olson, Wilson and Rendler prevailing, the board passed a rule that prevented transgender girls – i.e., students who had begun life as males or who had male genitalia – from competing in girls' sports, citing "fairness" and "scientific" distinctions between sexes.

The board, with Olson, Wilson and Rendler in ascendancy sought to limit what was referred to as "political or philosophical ideology" in the schools curriculum, in particular calling for an end to open endorsement of gender transition and lesbian/gay/bisexual/transexual/queer identities in school materials and activities.

Olson and Wilson explored the concept of a parental notification requirement for students assuming a gender different from their biological sex, similar to what had been undertaken by the Chino Valley Unified School District. That action was deferred, pending further refinement and discussion.

As the Chino Valley School District's leader, Shaw found herself lionized as a heroine by many of those in the conservative movement at the national level as controversy over the proliferation of gender altering surgical procedures being performed on underage subjects was raging in the early 2020s.

She parlayed that notoriety into a run for California superintendent of public education.

Shaw hit her high water mark when in the June 2026 Primary, she capture first place in the superintendent of public instruction.

She pushed full speed ahead in her crusade to put herself into position to moderate the state's liberal education policies. Doing so, however, required that she not seek reelection to the Chino Valley Unified School Board, where she represents Governing Board Area 3. Instead, moving to hopefully fill that eventual gap was her husband, Chris Shaw.

Also up for election this year was another board seat, the one representing Governing Board Area 4 that was captured by Monroe in 2022. Monroe provided votes of support right down the line with regard to the traditionalist conservative Christian values Shaw, Na and Cruz were advocating. He however, resigned his board post to move to Utah, and was replaced last year by Shaun Smith, who is likewise ideologically aligned with Shaw.

Eastward across the county in Redlands, Holohan, the longest serving member on the Redlands Unified School District Board and the model of a New Age liberal, ran in this year's Governing Board Area 1 contest. Rendler, the school board president whose politics put her in the middle of the road until vitriolic attacks on her shoved her into an alliance with Olson and Wilson, was due to seek reelection this year. She opted against doing so.

In this way, the outcome of Tuesday's election with regard to the Chino Valley Unified and Redlands Unified is at the very least a bellwethers with regard to the rightward progression of educational politics in California.

In San Bernardino County, the Chino Valley Unified School District is the third largest public school district ranked by student enrollment, with 26.562 pupils, behind Fontana Unified with 31,958 students and San Bernardino City Unified, with 48,078 enrollees.

Competing against Chris Shaw in Governing Board District 3 is Frank Gerdine, who falls on the progressive side of the political spectrum. As of today, at 5:31 p.m., Gerdine, with 5,227 or 57.47 percent of the total 9,095 votes cast and counted in the district, is leading Chris Shaw, who has 3,868 votes or 42.53 percent.

In Chino Valley Unified Governing District 4, Smith's effort to hang onto the post he was appointed to in order to carry on with the conservative agenda following Monroe's exit last year is experiencing equally rough sledding. Gang Members Use ICE Agent Alert Apps To Stymie Fontana PD from page 4 when plainclothes Fontana narcotics conducting what they thought was a narcotics investigation in Cudahy first encountered a handful of people arriving by car and then more and more people, virtually all of whom were Hispanic, joining an expanding crowd which was hostile toward their presence.

In fact, most, or all, of those arriving were under the mistaken impression that the undercover officers were federal immigration authorities, either with the Border Patrol or the Department of Immigration and Customs Enforcement.

The Fontana Police Department's on-the-ground operation commanders had been outfoxed by a rare show of cooperation by the capos of Florencia 13, Cudahy S/S C13 and Cudahy Familia, who normally are in competition with one another over both turf and the influx of drug-purchasing customers from outside the area.

In addition to those responding to the Panic Button, Alert Button, ICEBlock, People Over Papers and ResistMap calls-to-action at the location on Live Oak Street, near the intersection of Florence Avenue and Wilcox Avenue, where the officers were about to pounce on what their intelligence officers told them were some drug-pushing ringleaders were a good number, reportedly as many as 100, of local residents, some of whom were vocal about what these strangers were doing in their neighborhood. The plainclothes officers at first tried to carry on as if nothing was out of the ordinary, but some members of the crowd grew unruly, as they were intent on confronting federal immigration officers. After seeking for a time to maintain the fiction that they were simply bystanders in an effort to maintain the integrity of the undercover narcotics squad operation, the police officers, fearing for their own safety in the face of the growingly hostile crowd, declared they were "not with ICE" but were in fact on a narcotics stakeout, blowing their own cover.

The crowd, which according to a report filed by the police department later was "becoming increasingly disruptive." wasn't buying it.

At that point, the Fontana police on hand made a call to the Los Angeles County Sheriff's Department and the Los Angeles Police Department for assistance.

The arrival of deputies from the Los Angeles County Sheriff's Department did not chasten or reduce the collective anger of the crowd, which by that point had accurately identified the vehicles the Fontana Police Department had driven to the location. Those cars were pelted with rocks, bottles and other objects. Some members of the crowd produced knives and began slashing the cars' tires.

The Fontana police officers sought to effectuate the arrest of some of those they had intended to target in the raid. Meanwhile, two of the Florencia 13 gang leaders the Fontana Police had come to arrest were on a rooftop a block and a half away, having eluded arrest, and observing the chaos.

Several of the Fontana police cars were disabled and had to be towed the 55 miles back to Fontana.

The Fontana police officers involved in the operation avoided sustaining any serious injuries. Still, they were forced to admit that in terms of what they had set out to accomplish, they had humiliated themselves by having their asses handed to them by those they were targeting and had to find out the hard way that police work should not consist of hustling to bust people strange to you even if you come in armed with warrants issued by a judge who doesn't know or know of those people either and you have a hefty set of customized arms and armament with which to do the job.

at the opposite side of the Gainer home yard, such that the vehicles are facing one another at a distance close to the span of the Gainer property's yard width. During Clancy's first few steps onto the property at 13493 Iroquois, little can be discerned in the field of view of his bodyworn camera, as the front of the house is lost in the glare of the sun and hidden by the bushes which obscure much of what stands near the front porch. Suddenly audible is the Eisenbrey's warning to "Get back or you'll get shot." A split second later Eisenbrey can be seen backing away from the house's front entrance and then turning to run away from the hoe-carrying Gainer as he emerges from the house. As Eisenbrey completes his turn to run forward with his back to Gainer, he is yet training his gun in his right hand toward his pursuer behind him without being able to see what it is aimed at. When Gainer fully emerges from behind the bushes at what looks to be a full gallop, Clancy can be seen pointing his gun at Gainer, Gainer takes no more than two to three strides after the fleeing Eisenbrey once his figure emerges unobscured by the bushes before Clancy deputy fires his gun three times, it seems, at 4:55:13 and 4:55:14 on the video. It appears that Gainer is immediately felled by one or more of the shots. One of Gainer's sisters and his mother can be heard wailing and screaming, yelling "You didn't have to shoot him!" and "Why did you shoot him" and "Oh, my God!" and "Why'd you do that" and "You are the devil" and "Why would you shoot my baby?" and "Where was your Taser?" Both deputies tell the women, who are advancing toward Gainer, lying on the ground, to get "Get back" and Go back" and "Get back inside." Both deputies appear to be reluctant to approach the fallen Gainer while the mother and sister are proximate to them. With the women still keening and yelling, the first deputy, at 4:55:48, says "We're going to get him help. Get back in the residence."

At 4:55:59, a man can be heard saying, "Check him out, guys. Check him out!"

realized I would never be able to properly provide for her. I sincerely hoped that later, once things quieted down, we could think again about marriage. I was under the impression that Jackie felt the same."

She dealt with him in much the same way she had with Husted.

By 1967, Jackie ceased taking Warnecke's calls and told her son, JFK Jr., "We won't be seeing Mr. Jack again."

In October 1968, three months after her brother-in-law Robert's assassination, s Jackie Kennedy married Aristotle Onassis, the Greek shipping magnate who was then worth in excess of $400 million. The marriage was subject to a prenuptial arrangement in which she was given $3 million to replace her Kennedy trust fund, which she would lose because she was remarrying, as well as guaranteed to $150,000 each year for the rest of her life in the event of Onassis's death or a divorce.

The marriage soon became, according to tabloid accounts at the time, troubled. Though the couple for a time and then later intermittently live at the Onassis home in Athens, Aristotle Onassis's house on Skorpios, a private island in the Mediterranean and his yacht Christina O, Jackie continued to spend considerable time in New York City, where her children with President Kennedy attended school, while inhabiting with Onassis three residences, including her 15-room apartment at 1040 Fifth Avenue in New York City, her horse farm in New Jersey and his apartment in at 88 Avenue Foch in Paris.

Between late 1966 and 1969, Warnecke redevoted himself to his architectual business, whereupon he reestablished himself as a sought-after designer of buildings. He remarried in 1969.

Soon thereafter, he had a chance encounter with Jackie at the Ritz Paris. She asked him to her apartment for lunch.

"The rooms were large and dark and the windows were covered with heavy curtains," he recalled of the apartment. "Then suddenly we arrived at a light and contemporary room by a garden where a table was set for our lunch. Ari had let Jackie free in this small area. She unhesitatingly expressed frustration that this one room was all she was allowed to decorate."

It was at that point that Jacqueline confided that "she believed that her marriage to Onassis was the biggest mistake she had ever made," Warnecke wrote.

With Onassis's death in March 1975, Jackie inherited a sum variously estimated at $20 million to $26 million.

According to Warnecke, "Jackie and I renewed our friendship and began to see each other again socially. In these later years, it seemed to me she delighted in advising me in what she perceived to be my serious relationships with other women. Or possibly, she was testing me. Sometimes Jackie would come and visit me at my apartment on her way home from work. She casually would lounge at the foot of the bed, as I leaned my back against the tall headboard, talking away intimately and easily for hours and giving each other the kind of truthful advice only two people who are very close can. There was nothing physical going on between us, yet it felt as if we were in some ways still carrying on an exciting secret affair."

On February 11, 1994, Warnecke learned form a front page headline in the New York Times that Kennedy had been diagnosed with cancer and then wrote her a Valentine's note. It read,

"Dear Jackie,

I am not sure why I arrived in NY at this exact time except to find out after I got here it was about to be Valentine's Day. I must have subconsciously believed, as in Sleepless in Seattle, that I would someday meet you again on top of the Empire State Building.

Our romance ended by conditions and events which appeared almost beyond control, but it never really ended. Under more normal conditions, in all probability our love might have developed, and this is why I still dream of meeting you on top of the Empire State Building. This is also why I have opened my heart to you on this special Valentine's Day, in remembrance of my love to the most beautiful and wonderful woman in my life. —Jack"

According to Warnecke, "About 9 a.m. the following morning, Jackie was on the phone: 'You made my Valentine's Day.' She went on to say that what I wrote was true. 'You are right — the love we had then was never broken or damaged. Nothing had ever changed it.'"

Jacqueline Kennedy Onassis died on May 19, 1994.

Warnecke wrote, "I turned the television on, and there was Jackie being interred in the gravesite I had designed for her next to Jack and the eternal flame."

According to Warnecke, "When I returned to Washington in the fall of 1994, I visited the grave and paid my last respects. From then on, it would be Jackie with Jack that I would see whenever I crossed Memorial Bridge in the evening and would spot the eternal flame."

At 4:56:01 on Clancy's camera video, a third deputy, one who appears to be putting gloves onto his hands, comes into the camera's field of vision. At 4:56:17, the third deputy walks to stand over Gainer and then bends down to examine him. At 4:56:20, the video shows that the second deputy has gone toward the prone Gainer where he bends down to pick up the hoe. It appears that the third deputy begins cardiopulmonary resuscitation at 4:57:13, which is just about two minutes after Gainer was shot.

Over the next several minutes, the video shows three deputies are engaged in providing Gainer with cardiopulmonary resuscitation while pausing briefly to check for a pulse, for wounds, to put a compression patch or tourniquets in place. "Come on, buddy," one of the deputies can be heard saying on a couple of occasions when another deputy reports that he cannot detect a pulse in Gainer.

At 5:03:15, a firefighter/paramedic team arrives, the video shows.

Gainer was eventually transported to a hospital, where he was pronounced dead.

According to a public release memorandum put out by the district attorney's office that does not bear the signature of any specific deputy district attorney but is based upon an investigative report logged under the number DR# 602400019 and which was completed by Detective Shawn Thurman of the San Bernardino County Sheriff's Department as the "case agent" assigned to evaluate the shooting, Eisenbrey went up to the front door of the Gainer resident and was invited inside by Norman Gainer. SAs he stepped into the entryway of the house, Eisenbrey heard, he later told investigators, someone say, "Hey! Watch out, watch out, he has a stick." That stick, according to the public release memorandum, proved to be a so-called "hula hoe,' which Gainer had earlier used to break the houses window and which had been misdescribed by his cousin in the call to the sheriff's dispatch center as a shovel

"As Deputy Eisenbrey started to step inside the residence, Ryan appeared from the west end of the residence," the public release memorandum states. "There was a small hallway between Ryan and the front door where Deputy Eisenbrey still stood. Ryan was armed with a steel stirrup-shaped hula-hoe with a 4-foot, 10-inch wooden handle, and a 10-inch black metal frying pan. Ryan held the hula-hoe with two hands by the wooden handle with the stirrup-shaped, flat, sharpened metal portion over his head in a striking position. Ryan also grasped in his right hand a metal frying pan, held against the wooden handle of the hula-hoe. Ryan's left hand grasped the hula-hoe towards the bottom of the wooden handle. When Ryan appeared he was approximately 12 feet from Deputy Eisenbrey Ryan charged at Deputy Eisenbrey while the weapon was still held over Ryan's head in a striking position. Deputy Eisenbrey yelled, 'get back, get back or you're going to get shot.' As Deputy Eisenbrey gave commands, Deputy Eisenbrey retreated from the front doorway, walking backwards, as he drew his duty weapon. Deputy Clancy heard these commands and drew his duty weapon and pointed it in the direction of Deputy Eisenbrey and Ryan. Ryan disobeyed Deputy Eisenbrey's orders and continued advancing towards Deputy Eisenbrey. Ryan closed the distance between him and Deputy Eisenbrey. Deputy Eisenbrey turned away from Ryan and began to run east into the front yard; Ryan was still in pursuit of Deputy Eisenbrey. Deputy Eisenbrey was in fear for his life and fired one round at Ryan. Simultaneously, Deputy Clancy feared for Deputy Eisenbrey's life and fired two rounds at Ryan."

Without stating so directly, the public release memorandum appears to indicate that Ryan Gainer was hit by both shots fired from Deputy Clancy's gun and the single shot fired by Deputy Eisenbrey as he was running from Gainer and twisting to aim his gun in the opposite direction he was moving.

The public release memorandum states that Dr. Jolie Rodriguez, the forensic pathologist for the Riverside County Coroner's Office conducted an autopsy on Ryan Gainer on March 11, 2024, two days after his death. "Dr. Rodriguez determined the cause of death was multiple gunshot wounds," the public release memorandum states.

According to the public release memorandum, Gainer had an entry wound on the right side of his back,roughly 20.87 inches from the top of his head and 5.333 inches to the right of the center of his back, consisting of a .393-inch circular hole. The exit wound for that bullet was on the left side of his chest at the anterior axillary line, approximately 14.57 inches below the top of his head and 7.48 inches from the middle of his torso. That exit wound was slit that was roughly .59 inches in length and roughly one-fifth of an inch wide. The direction of the wound path was back to front, right to left, and upward.

A second entry wound, .512 of an inch long and .394 inches wide, was noted on the left hip, approximately 30.31 inches below the top of the head and 6.3 inches to the left of the middle of the front of his body. The wound was anterior midline. The bullet that caused the wound was retrieved from under the skin of Gainer's left buttock, approximately 31.1 inch below the top of Gainer's head and the head and 3.543 inches to the left of the middle of his body. The direction of the wound path was front to back, left to right, and downward.

A third entry .59 inch long and .512 inch wide wound was found on the top left upper arm, approximately 12.6 inches from his left wrist. It consisted of a 1.5 by 1.3-centimeter oval defect. An exit wound was noted at the medial aspect of the left upper arm, approximately 40 centimeters proximal to the left wrist. The direction of the wound path could not be determined.

According to the public release memorandum, thirteen seconds elapsed from the time yong Gainer first came into Eisenbrey's field of vision and the time Gainer was shot. According to the report, within three seconds of Eisenbrey reaching the doorway of the home, Gainer began running toward him from the interior of the home.

In the section of the public release memorandum devoted to "analysis," is stated, "In this case, Deputy Eisenbrey had an honest and objectively reasonable belief that Ryan posed an imminent risk of serious bodily injury or death. Prior to Deputy Eisenbrey's arrival, there were multiple calls to 9-1-1 from two separate occupants of the residence, detailing that Ryan assaulted family members, broke the window of the front door, had a 'shovel,'and had a piece of glass in his hand. Deputy Eisenbrey arrived at the scene wearing a sheriff's department uniform identifying himself as a peace officer.

Once Deputy Eisenbrey arrived at the residence's front door, he announced himself, "sheriff's department," and was invited inside by one of the occupants. On the heels of being invited in, a warning was yelled to the deputy, "look out, he's got a… ." Before the warning was complete, Ryan was seen entering the short hallway leading to the front door and running towards Deputy Eisenbrey with a long hula-hoe held over his head in a striking position. Deputy Eisenbrey drew his firearm and gave a verbal command to Ryan to get back. Deputy Eisenbrey also retreated backwards to make space between himself and Ryan." Noting "Ryan did not stop running towards Eisenbrey" and that Eisenbrey was both "walking backwards... and began to run to retreat" as well as that he had "then turned his body away from Ryan," the public release memorandum stated that "Ryan then started to bring the hula-hoe down towards Deputy Eisenbrey. The distance between the two was so close that Ryan would have easily been able to strike Deputy Eisenbrey which would certainly have killed or caused serious injury to the deputy. It was objectively reasonable that Deputy Eisenbrey thought Ryan was going to attack him with the hula-hoe if Deputy Eisenbrey did not shoot him. Given those circumstances, the decision by Deputy Eisenbrey to use deadly force was justified."

Furthermore, according to the analysis, "Deputy Clancy also had an honest and objectively reasonable belief that Ryan posed an imminent risk of serious bodily injury or death to Deputy Eisenbrey based on the same information in the 9-1-1 calls and what Deputy Clancy observed immediately upon arrival at the residence. Noting Clancy heard Eisenbray telling Ryan to get back or he would be shot and that "Deputy Clancy observed Ryan running after Deputy Eisenbrey in close proximity with a hula-hoe raised above his head in a striking motion," the analysis states that "Deputy Clancy withdrew his firearm but did not have time to give any commands to Ryan before he observed Ryan's hands bringing the hula-hoe down towards Deputy Eisenbrey in a striking motion. From Deputy Clancy's view, it was objectively reasonable that Ryan was going to strike Deputy Eisenbrey with the hula-hoe and Deputy Clancy needed to intervene. Deputy Clancy's decision to use deadly force was also justified under these circumstances."

According to the conclusion presented in the public release memorandum, "Based on the facts presented in the reports and the applicable law, Deputy Eisenbrey's use of lethal force was a proper exercise of his right of self-defense and therefore his actions were legally justified. Furthermore, based on the same facts and applicable law, Deputy Clancy's use of lethal force was a proper exercise of his right of defense of others and therefore his actions were also legally justified."

have not closed the conservative majority on the school board out entirely, since Na and Cruz as well as another nominal conservative – John Cervantes – remain in place, Sonja Shaw's pursuit of the superintendent of public instruction effort has sacrificed her hold on the District 3 seat and did not succeed in effectuating the systemic change the state's outnumbered and politically outmuscled conservative forces were hoping for.

In the Redlands Unified School Board race, Holohan was up against Dr. Dale Broome, who has made no bones about his support for Olson and Wilson, and that if he were elected, he would solidify the victories the conservative faction has been scoring over the last 22 months. That does not appear to be in the cards, however. As of today, at 5:31 p.m., Holohan had claimed 5.903 or 56.42 percent of the votes from Governing Board Area 1 that have been counted, while Broome has chalked up 4,560 voter endorsements or 43.58 percent.

In the race to replace Rendler, the conservatives were backing Maria Montes. She, however, polled 1,865 votes or 31.93 percent, not enough to prevent Ryan Schavrien, an avowed progressive, from claiming first place with 3.275 votes or 56.07 percent. Running in third was Riara Richardson, with 701 votes or 12 percent.
